Doctor testifies

Deaths past Alaia recall

By DAVID KUTZMANN
Of the Daily Pilot Staff

A Newport Beach psychiatrist who saw Dr. Louis Alaia as a patient says the murder defendant has no recollection of stabbing his former wife and her attorney in the woman's Huntington Harbour home last June 13.

Testifying for the defense, Dr. David Sheffner said Alaia, 50, had told him he simply doesn't remember what happened at the time of the killings.

Previous testimony has indicated that the Huntington Harbour surgeon had gone to his ex-wife's home that night to discuss weekend custody rights of his two young children.

Sheffner said Alaia told him he can recall entering the home, having a short discussion with his former wife, Margy Lou Alaia, and then being ordered to leave the house or the police would be called.

It is at this point, the psychiatrist previously testified, that his client's memory grows fuzzy. He can remember seeing a shining light, Sheffner said, but then his memory goes blank until he is next standing in the kitchen, where his ex-wife and Long Beach attorney Marvin Tincher lay with fatal knife wounds.

Alaia has pleaded innocent and innocent by reason of insanity to the dual murder charges against him.

Sheffner, testifying for a second day in Orange County Superior Court Judge Byron McMillan's courtroom, said Alaia was in an "altered state of consciousness" at the time of the slayings. He said the defendant, who again wept profusely Wednesday, was simply not conscious of what he was doing.

The witness said the surgeon's actions reflected a "breakthrough of primitive, explosive forces in his personality," uncharacteristic behavior for the doctor.

Defense attorneys contend that Alaia was temporarily insane at the time of the stabbings due to both extreme physical and emotional stresses.

They said this included his affliction with the disease called narcolepsy, or an uncontrollable desire to sleep, his bitter divorce

County pilots angered

'Squeeze out' charged at John Wayne Airport

By STEVE MARBLE
Of the Daily Pilot Staff

The Orange County Pilots Association has charged that the new master plan for John Wayne Airport lays the groundwork for "squeezing out" private aviators.

Further, the pilots group — claiming to represent more than 10,000 private pilots — contends the master plan seeks to cut down on airplane tiedowns at the county airport.

"The planners have signaled to us that our days on the airport are numbered," James Evans, a Huntington Beach resident and president of the pilots association, wrote to county officials.

Evans, who says he's writing a more positive letter to county supervisors, argues that the long-in-the-works master plan is a "waste of time" and should be dumped in favor of a broader, long range study.

He suggests that John Wayne Airport and Los Alamitos should be limited to general aviation air traffic with commercial air carriers moving to El Toro.

"We are well aware of military opposition to such a plan," Evans writes, "but we have reason to believe the reserves at Los Alamitos will have to share it or lose it.

"We also believe that at some point the marines will opt for a more efficient training base."

Among the criticism detailed by the pilots group is the master plan's suggestion that a new terminal be constructed adjacent to the existing terminal.

"If the number of flights by the air carriers is to be limited," the letter continues, "then there is no justification for the elaborate, spacious, gold-plated terminal building envisioned by the plan."

The pilots association claims the terminal proposal is either extravagant or "an unspoken plan" to expand on daily departures and the number of air carriers permitted to operate out of the county airport.

Pilots also say the plan paves the way for "large jets and light planes to continue to mix it up on the taxiways." They say five airplanes recently have been blown over by jet blasts.

Evans maintains that to support the recently released master plan would be "to sell our members and the other

Store tools used in jewels robbery

NILES, Ill. (AP) — Thieves used crowbars, sledgehammers and screwdrivers from the tool department of a Sears, Roebuck and Co. store to rob the store of at least $50,000 worth of gold watches, gold chains and valuable coins, police say.

Two or three men hid in the suburban Chicago mall store after closing time Tuesday night, then ransacked the jewelry department, forcing open display cases and storage drawers and filling four tote bags from the luggage department with loot, chief of detectives Lt. John Christie said Wednesday.

"It was a very crude operation," Christie said. "It was not a professional job because of the way they hacked their way into the drawers."

He said the burglars escaped by smashing a plate-glass window leading to the mall. The broken glass was discovered by security guards Wednesday when they went to open the store for maintenance personnel.

John Austin, a spokesman for Sears, said the loss could not be estimated until an inventory was taken. He said store officials were bringing merchandise from other Sears stores so "it won't look like a storm hit."

However, Niles police investigator Samual Fucarino said the loss was "in excess of $50,000."

Detectives said the theft was similar to the July 31 robbery of a Sears store in Chicago in which $200,000 worth of similar merchandise was lost.

Bandit talks bank teller out of cash

A clean-cut, good-looking man with nothing but a wallet in his hands held up a Newport Beach bank Wednesday during the busy noon hour and calmly walked off with $285 in cash.

Authorities said the young bandit walked into the Bank of America at 3300 E. Coast Highway at about 12:40 p.m., approached a teller and simply asked her for all her money.

The teller told officers she asked the robber to repeat his demand and was told, "Give me your money, I'm not kidding around."

Police described the bandit as being about 23 years old with brown curly hair and was wearing a blue plaid shirt.

Gas kills four

EASTON (AP) — Four farmworkers were killed and a fifth is in "very, very serious" condition from apparent asphyxiation caused by a propane gas leak in their quarters. Paramedics found about 26 beds in the small white bungalow at 5277 W. Sumner Ave. Wednesday night. "Good thing it wasn't a full house," said one paramedic, shaking his head. Another somberly added, "It was full enough."

Friends aided effort

LEDYARD, Conn. (AP) — The prosecutor who is pressing manslaughter charges against two young men says they had "a very compassionate objective" when they allegedly helped a crippled athlete kill himself.

Kenneth W. Wright, 24, allegedly was carried in his wheelchair into the woods Sept. 27 by the friends. After the friends left, authorities say, the former high school football star held a shotgun to his stomach and squeezed the trigger.

Wright's father, Kenneth E. Wright, says he was "damned surprised" at the arrests of William R. King, 24, of Ledyard, and Brian W. Taylor, 25, of North Stonington.

They surrendered to state police Wednesday and were released on $1,000 bond each after being arraigned at New London Superior Court, where their cases were scheduled for a Jan. 6 hearing.

"These men are not criminals. They are young men who tried to help somebody" with "a very compassionate objective. They tried to help this boy along," said Assistant State's Attorney Harold B. Dean.

But the state alleges they committed second-degree manslaughter by violating a section of the law established to punish anyone who "intentionally causes or aids another person, other than by force, duress or deception, to commit suicide."

"They realized what they were doing, that they were trying to help him end his life," said Dean.

Wright had been confined to a wheelchair since breaking his neck in a good-natured wrestling match in June 1979. He had come to love wrestling, boxing, hunting and skin diving once his high school football days were over.

"He couldn't cope. He was an athlete," Wright's mother said.

Wright went on from high school to take a job as a chemical operator at Pfizer Inc., a pharmaceutical company in Groton.

"He liked his job and was looking forward to making it his career" before he was paralyzed, said William Mignault, the high school football coach in Ledyard.

"It seemed like he was trying to fight this (paralysis). He was working to strengthen his upper body," Mignault said.

Since his accident, Wright had been undergoing painful and expensive therapy, and doctors held out hope he might be able to walk someday with the aid of braces and crutches. Wright was told he might also return to work.

Nixon files papers suit

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former President Nixon has filed suit in an effort to retain his right to any monetary compensation he may be owed because the government has custody of his personal and presidential papers.

The suit, filed Wednesday in U.S. District Court here was a "purely precautionary measure," said Nixon lawyer R. Stan Mortenson.

He said it was designed to protect any "rights and options in the future" that the former president may have under the 1974 Presidential Recordings and Materials Preservations Act. That act says money should be set aside to compensate a former president whose property is taken by the government.

'Strangled 2'

Freeway killer suspect talks

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Freeway murder defendant Matthew Miley told authorities that he and another man, William G. Bonin, killed two young boys, according to previously sealed testimony.

Miley, 19, of Bellfower, is charged with the strangulation of Charles Miranda, 14, whose nude body was found Feb. 3 on a street in Los Angeles, and James McCabe, 12, whose body was discovered Feb. 6 in Walnut.

Bonin, 33, a Downey truck driver and primary suspect in the series of freeway murders, is charged with killing Miranda and McCabe in addition to 12 others.

Three other defendants, Vernon Butts, 23, also of Downey, James M. Munro, 19, of Long Beach, and Eric Marten Wijaendts, 20, of Garden Grove, also are charged in the case involving the murder of 44 young men and boys whose bodies were dumped near freeways in five Southern California counties since 1972.

Testimony at his closed Dec. 1-2 preliminary hearing alleged Miley described in grisly detail how he and Bonin strangled the two youthful victims within hours of each other in the rear of Bonin's van.

The purported admission was made Aug. 23 to a Los Angeles County sheriff's detective the day after Miley was arrested in Houston, Tex., and returned to Orange County on an extradition warrant.

Miley made the statements to detective David Kusher after being read his constitutional rights, according to the testimony.

Kusher, under questioning by Deputy District Attorney Aaron Stovitz, who is prosecuting the Freeway Killer cases, said Miley told him the first victim was a young homosexual he and Bonin picked up on a Hollywood street.

Miley said Bonin sodomized the victim and that he tried to, then held the boy while Bonin "tied his hands, tied his feet, then tied his feet to his hands . . . ," the detective testified.

Kusher testified Miley told him Bonin grabbed the victim's shirt and put it over the boy's head and began twisting it.

While Bonin was twisting the shirt "like a towel," Kusher testified, he asked Miley to hold it while Bonin got an iron bar.

"Bonin took the iron bar, stuck it in the shirt, and began twisting it in a corkscrew-type effect until the boy was dead," the detective said Miley told him.

Miley told the detective they dumped the victim's body, then drove to Huntington Beach where they spotted a boy Miley described as being between 10 to 12 years old, according to the testimony.

The boy entered the van voluntarily and got in the back with Bonin where Miley said he heard "crying sounds" being made by the victim, the hearing transcript said.

Miley said he drove a "very, very long distance," Kusher testified, "and the next thing he (Miley) realized was that Bonin had this young boy down and he was strangling him, again with his shirt.

"Miley admitted that he again helped hold this boy down, but there wasn't much to holding him down because he was so small, and that he helped by twisting the shirt 'around the boy's neck a little bit' until he was dead."

After a second long drive, Kusher testified, Miley said they took the boy, who was dressed, "and deposited him next to a dumpster. . . ."

Miley, who has been bound over for trial, is scheduled for arraignment on the murder charges today in Los Angeles Superior Court.

Preliminary hearings for both Munro and Wijaendts are slated to begin Dec. 22 in Municipal Court.

All five defendants are charged with murder involving "special circumstances — murder committed during a robbery — Stovitz said, and could face the death penalty if convicted.

Bonin and Butts are currently involved in a lengthy, closed-door preliminary hearing before Municipal Court Judge Vincent Erickson, which is expected to end this week.

Rape-related case

4 youths charged in firebombing try

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — Four teen-agers have been indicted on charges of attempting to firebomb the home of a woman who identified one of them as the youth who raped her this fall, officials say.

Police said a Molotov cocktail was hurled through a window at the woman's home less than a day after she had picked her attacker out of a police lineup.

Wednesday a federal grand jury indicted William Edward Blevins, 19, Carmen Antoinette White, 18, Dennis Brooks, 19, and Anthony Victor Long, 19, according to U.S. Attorney James Brady.

Blevins last week was convicted of first-degree criminal sexual conduct and breaking and entering for the Oct. 28 assault on the woman, who was 7½ months pregnant at the time.

The victim and her 21-month-old daughter were in their southeast Grand Rapids home when Blevins "literally smashed his way into her home . . . proceeded to beat her, engage in three acts of sexual attack and then remove a number of items of personal property," Kent County Circuit Judge George Boucher had said.

The morning after she identified Blevins as her assailant, a firebomb was thrown into the house as she, her husband and daughter were sleeping. But the fuse failed and the Molotov cocktail did not explode, police said. Damage was limited to a broken window.

The indictment accused Ms. White of tossing the bomb into the home, conspiracy, possession or aiding in the possession of the bomb and perjury. She was being held in the Kent County Jail.

Blevins . . . who was in jail at the time of the firebomb attack . . . and Brooks were charged with conspiracy and possession or aiding in the possession of a bomb. The indictment accused Long, recently sentenced to a six-month jail term on an unrelated breaking and entering charge, of possession of a bomb.

Fast fiscal action eyed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ronald Reagan is "seriously considering" declaring an "economic emergency" shortly after he takes office Jan. 20, one of the president-elect's top aides said Wednesday.

James Baker, who will be Reagan's chief of staff, said Reagan and his advisers feel "it's extremely important to act quickly and decisively" on economic matters.

Proposed emergency action might touch on initiatives to spur economic growth, a reduction of federal regulations, monetary policy reform, and a cancellation of remaining controls on oil and other petroleum products, according to aides.

'Heinous, brutal'

Convicted slayer gets 1,500 years

CHICAGO (AP) — A convicted murderer sentenced to a term of 500 to 1,500 years has no chance of getting out of prison before the turn of the century, state officials say.

Cook County Circuit Judge Francis J. Mahon sentenced Paul Bryant Wednesday in the slaying of a 59-year-old woman during the burglary of her apartment.

Mahon said the evidence showed Bryant, 30, had slashed his victim's throat when she discovered the burglary.

"I am letting any future parole board know that your behavior was heinous, brutal and indicative of wanton cruelty," Mahon said.

Bryant, a former worker in a home for the mentally retarded, was found guilty Nov. 21 of murder and rape in the death of Frances Parro of Chicago.

Sentenced under Illinois' old criminal code, Bryant would have been eligible for possible parole after serving nine years and nine months in prison on the murder conviction. But Mahon ordered Bryant's term to be served consecutively with a previous 20-year sentence for five rapes.

"That means there is no chance he will get out of prison before the year 2000," Assistant State's Attorney Joseph Locallo said.

He said Bryant is facing a second murder trial, and Locallo said he plans to seek the death penalty.

No guarantees, no deal

Iran says capitulate, get hostages

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Prime Minister Mohammad Ali Rajai said today the United States can win release of the 52 American hostages before the Christmas holidays if Washington "can give the necessary guarantees," the official Iranian news agency reported.

Rajai apparently referred to Iran's new message, which he said outlined "financial guarantees" needed from the United States to clear the way for release of the hostages who spent their 411th day in captivity today.

A spokesman for Rajai's office said the Iranian reply has been prepared for relay to the United States by Algerian intermediaries, but that he could not confirm that the message had been given to an Algerian delegation waiting in Tehran.

A report from Tehran by the American CBS network said that Rajai handed the Algerian diplomats a briefcase today, presumably containing the response Washington was waiting to receive.

But the spokesman, reached by telephone from Beirut, said he was unaware of Rajai handing over any answer to the Algerians. The spokesman identified himself as Mr. Sadeghi of the prime minister's public relations office.

Tuesday, Rajai termed the message Iran's "final reply" and indicated U.S. financial guarantees were needed to meet Iranian conditions for release of the hostages. But he has never spelled out exactly what guarantees Iran seeks and Washington officials were waiting to see if Iran's latest position indicates a softening of the original conditions set by the Iranian government.

Among its conditions, Iran is demanding return to Iran of the wealth of the late shah and his family and cancellation of all legal claims against Iran pending in U.S. courts. The Carter administration has said the United States government cannot legally fulfill the conditions.

Pruneface

Sorry, mayor tells Reagan

DETROIT (AP) — Detroit Mayor Coleman Young says he is sorry he called President-elect Reagan "pruneface."

A young aide said the mayor issued the apology Wednesday when he told a meeting of 35 Detroit businessmen, "This is a good time to say I'm sorry. When I called him (Reagan) pruneface, it was campaign rhetoric."

The mayor was a staunch supporter of President Carter, and the Democratic administration sent a steady flow of federal dollars to the economically beleaguered city.

The mayor used the term in October when he referred to Reagan as the "pruneface from the West." After the election, while addressing a group of University of Chicago students, Young upgraded his description.

"I'm sorry I called him 'pruneface from the West.' I will now address him as President Pruneface," Young said then.

Man guilty in rape case

FRESNO (AP) — A man has been convicted of raping an 82-year-old woman here a day after he was released from prison.

Prosecutors said the rape occurred one day after Polk was released from San Luis Obispo Men's Colony in August. He had served two years for burglarizing the same senior citizens complex where the rape victim lived.

Census shows Coast booming

By FREDERICK SCHOEMEHL
Of the Daily Pilot Staff

Orange Coast communities were the boom communities of the 1970s, preliminary 1980 U.S. Census figures reaffirmed.

The figures — which remain subject to minor modifications — show the official Orange County population as 1,919,264 people, an increase of 35 percent over the 1970 figure of 1,421,233.

THE NUMBER OF housing units in the county increased to 719,318 from 463,199 in 1970, an increase of 55 percent.

The figures indicate what planning officials have suggested: The trend today is toward fewer people residing in a single housing unit. Simply stated, more people are living alone.

The preliminary figures show that Fountain Valley's population increased to 54,874 from 31,886 in 1970, an increase of 72 percent. The number of housing units increased to 16,741 from 8,976 in 1970, an increase of 86 percent.

IN NEIGHBORING Huntington Beach, the Census Bureau reports, the 1970 population of 115,460 increased to 170,597 for a 47 percent increase. The number of housing units in the city increased from 35,971 to 63,833, an increase of 77 percent.

Atypical among the coastal communities was Seal Beach which realized a 5.8 percent population increase from 24,441 to 25,876. Its number of residental units increased 17.7 percent to 13,927 from 11,834.

Figures previously released by the Census Bureau showed that Irvine's population, now at 68,650, increased more than 800 percent during the 10 years since the last census. Irvine became a city in 1971.

SAN JUAN Capistrano posted an increase of nearly 300 percent. Its population grew from 3,781 to 14,989 between 1970 and this year. The number of housing units increased from 1,394 to 5,910.

Costa Mesa grew by 12 percent, from 72,660 to 81,132 while the number of housing units increased by 34 percent from 24,823 to 33,361.

Newport Beach's population of 49,582 in 1970 grew to 58,352, an increase of nearly 18 percent. The city's housing stock increased more than 32 percent, from 22,522 to 29,855 units.

LAGUNA BEACH showed a population gain of 22 percent, from 14,550 to 17,800. The number of dwellings increased 24 percent to 9,464 from 7,628.

In San Clemente the population increased 59 percent over the 10-year period from 17,063 to 27,269. Housing units increased by 77 percent, from 7,479 to 13,259.

Anaheim remained the most populous city in the county with a population this year of 214,688, compared to 166,408 in 1970.

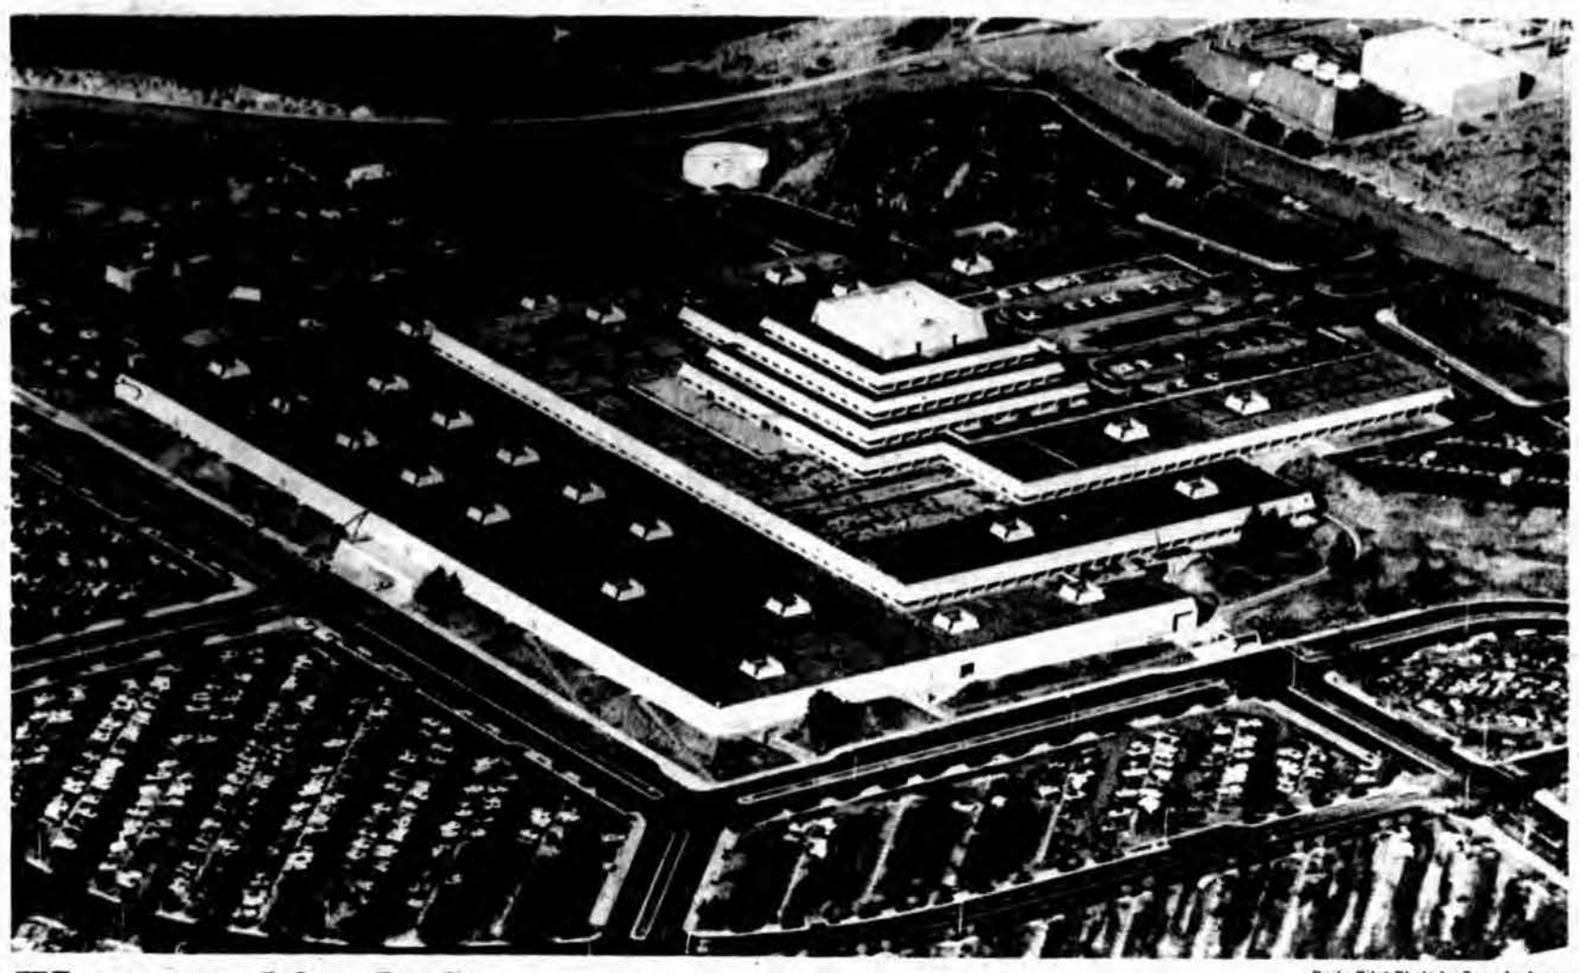

Second largest city, Santa Ana, now has 204,089 residents, compared to 155,710 in 1970.

TWO CITIES, Buena Park and Los Alamitos, showed population decreases, according to the census figures.

Buena Park lost about 1 percent of its population to 62,930 residents, despite more than a 4,000-unit increase in the number of dwellings.

Los Alamitos with a 1970 population of 11,346, had a 17 percent decline, to 9,439 residents.

John Ramirez, a census analyst, said the figures will be refined between now and Jan 1, when they are turned over in official form to the White House.

The building is used by the Internal Revenue Service and the U.S. Census Bureau.

Crowding of county jails told

The capacity of Orange County jails will be exceeded early in this decade and overcrowding will be the rule rather than the exception, according to a report from the county Administrative Office.

The county currently has 2,236 beds in its four jails: the main men's and women's jails in Santa Ana, the James A. Musick honor farm in El Toro and the Theo Lacy minimum-security jail in Orange.

ADMISSIONS TO the main men's jail have increased at 30 percent per year since 1975, though, and the 1,331-bed jail "approaches overcrowding on a regular basis," according to the report.

The County Board of Supervisors reviewed the report on Tuesday and told members of the administrative office and the county Sheriff's Department to monitor state funds for planning more jail facilities.

County officials apparently will need a lot of state funding to meet the projected increase of 1,786 beds needed to solve overcrowding by the year 2000. The cost to add those beds will be $100 million, even without counting inflation, according to the study.

THE REPORT prepared by program planner Ron LaPorte includes possibilities for enlarging the facilities. He said construction of a larger facility at the Musick site could be the first step to handle possible over-crowding at the main men's jail.

Plans are under way to add more beds for women at a separate jail in El Toro.

County cuts housing red tape

By GLENN SCOTT
Of the Daily Pilot Staff

County supervisors have approved a plan to reconstruct the way development plans are processed by Orange County's bureaucracy.

Proponents of the plan said the new system will speed up the county's cumbersome processing system, thereby saving developers time and home buyers money.

"It's like a giant Christmas gift to housing," suggested Douglas Gfeller, president of the Irvine-based Gfeller Development Co.

He was one of a group of representatives of the local housing industry who spent the last year creating the proposal, which was approved almost intact by the supervisors.

The plan, he said, is a "large shopping list of improvements," which could realistically cut processing time from 30 to 50 percent.

Estimating the savings to home buyers is more difficult, he said, adding "you're talking about thousands and thousands of dollars per house in savings in carrying costs alone."

Murray Storm, director of the county Environmental Management Agency, told the supervisors he can't wait to get started with some of the recommendations.

He said after the meeting that he was going to issue an order immediately to start a sweeping realignment of the planning functions to merge now-separated planning operations that examine either current permits and projects or future ones.

Among other features of the plan are:

— Concurrent processing, where permits for general plan amendments, zoning changes and tract maps can be reviewed at the same time.

— Creation of a project manager division in EMA with workers responsible for coordinating the processing to ensure fast service.

— Relocation of EMA offices to reflect the reorganization and to create a so-called "one-stop" service center for applicants at the Engineering-Finance Building at the Santa Ana Civic Center.

Possible salary increases for planners, who have left the county government in large numbers during the past two years to accept jobs with private firms.

Projected needs for four more planners.

A monitoring program to examine how much, if any, of a time-savings is created by the new system, and publication of the results in an annual report.

Compilation of a manual to include all of the board of supervisors' policies on land use and development.

Officer, stop that bank

Action against building movers eyed

Legal action is pending today against AA Jet House Movers Inc., of Los Angeles, who Irvine police claim weren't exactly flying low while towing half of a bank building through their sleeping city Wednesday.

In fact, Patrolman Dennis McNeely alleged, the unwieldy convoy of five big trucks ferrying the former Bank of Newport headquarters spied at 12:05 a.m. was blocking all four lanes of Jamboree Boulevard.

AND NOT ONLY THAT, he and partner Officer Jim Broomfield claimed the moving crew headed for Riverside had halted near Michelson Drive to do some roof repairs on the structure.

They confronted foreman Arthur Aguilar and asked for his city moving permit, whereupon they alleged Aguilar handed them a torn scrap of paper with some numbers on it.

Under Section VIF-649 of the Irvine Municipal Code, that isn't sufficient to allow house towing, let alone roof repairs at a major intersection.

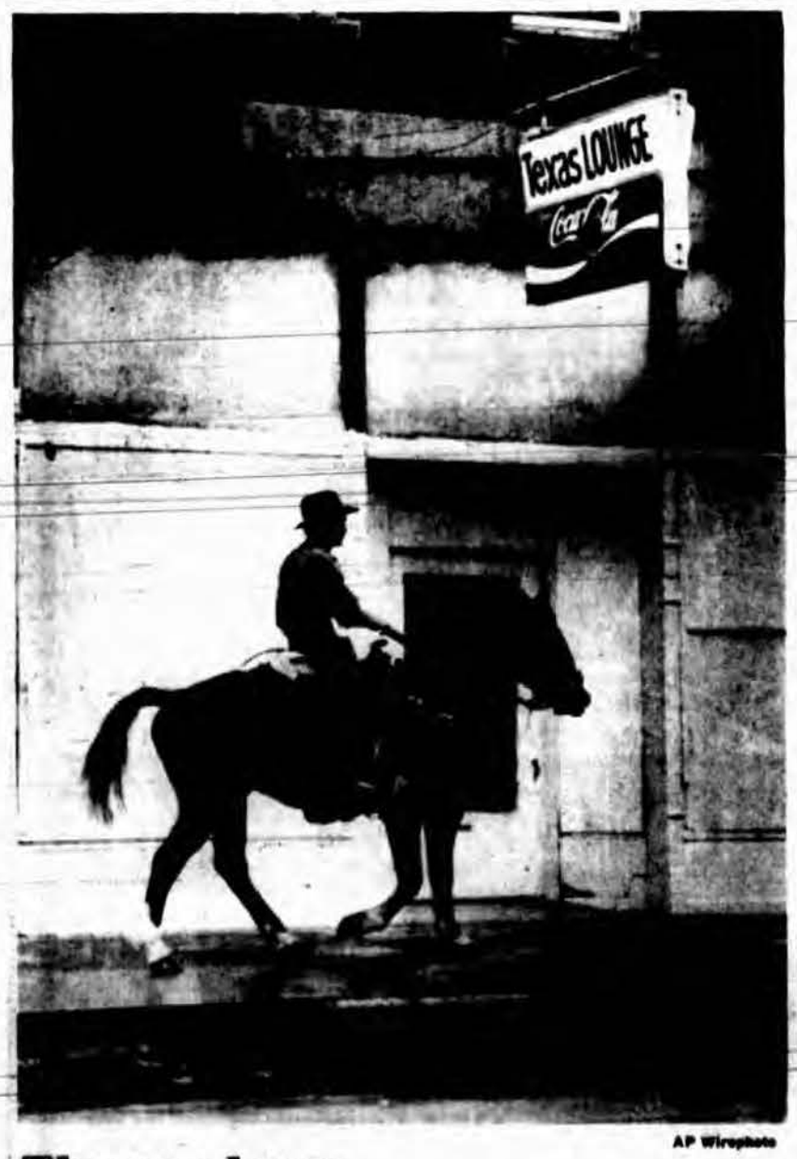

Investigators said Aguilar claimed that was indeed the number of the moving permit, but the bonafide legal paperwork was off up the road somewhere.

Officers McNeely and Broomfield claimed Aguilar told them that was where the other half of the convoy — the transport crew and the other half of the old Bank of Newport were.

The ungainly mobile bank building segments were finally allowed to proceed on their way with a warning not to block traffic, but police want legal action taken against the moving firm.

A SPOKESMAN FOR the Bank of Newport said this morning the dismantled structure, formerly at the corner of Pacific Coast Highway and Avocado Street, Corona del Mar, was sold.

He said he didn't know who bought the portable structure when his bank was replaced by permanent quarters at the same location.

Cub survives blaze, faces bigger test

A female mountain lion cub, apparently separated from its mother by the recent fire in Orange County, is in isolation today at the Wildlife Waystation in the San Fernando Valley, where an attempt may be made to prepare it for re-introduction to the wild.

The lion was found under a cabin stairway in the Holy Jim Canyon area of the Santa Ana Mountains by David Spencer of Lakewood, and turned over to the California Department of Fish and Game Dec. 1.

Warden Ron Duvall, who took custody of the cub, said residents of the area believe another, larger cub, is still in the vicinity.

"They've heard it crying at night," he said. Spencer said he had seen it twice.

The fish and game wildlife manager in Orange County, Steve Kimple, believes the other cub, if larger, may be a male. He estimates the mountain lion population in the Santa Ana range at about 12.

Martine Colette, proprietor of the waystation, has placed the lion cub by itself in a separate part of the compound, where public access is restricted. Every effort is being made to avoid human contact.

It is expected that it may take as long as a year before the cub could be released, but both Kimple and Duvall have their doubts about a successful outcome.

Mountain lions once associated with human beings are seldom rehabilitated in the wild, Kimple said.

It snore was lots of fun

LOCAL POLITIZ WITH A ZZzzz: It has been described as important, fruitful, even by one official as a coup d' etat. This, my friends, was an historic meeting of the good Huntington Beach City Council.

It may not have really been any of the superlatives listed above. But Monday night's session of the Huntington lawmakers was a couple of things for certain.

It was a marathon. And, two, it was even longer than that.

Listen, the Huntington Beach council went into session at 6 p.m. Monday night and Tuesday was well on its way to being shot by the time it ended.

MERCIFULLY, the final gavel fell weakly against the podium at 4 a.m. — 10 hours after the proceeding had opened.

Huntington Beach historians are currently searching feverishly through the record books trying to see if this is the longest Huntington Beach council session on record.

You can save them the fever. It clearly is, unless you count those San Francisco sessions with the League of California Cities as one council meeting. Only the city of Irvine could approach this 4 a.m. record.

What in the world do you suppose a city council could DO until 4 o'clock in the morning?

SOME WIVES AND HUSBANDS of Huntington Beach council members could well have been pondering that question themselves as they sat with the knitting and late, late, late show.

Huntington councilman going home after marathon session

Well, one thing the council people allege they did was to form a new superagency of administrative services and appoint the current acting city administrator, Ben Arguello, to head it up. He had nominated himself.

This drew a cry of foul from City Treasurer Warren Hall, who apparently envisioned himself as a heavy candidate for the new directorship.

Hall labeled the action "a coup d' etat."

THAT'S FRENCH, I think. The dictionary says a coup d' etat is, "A sudden, forceful stroke in politics; especially, the sudden forceful overthrow of the government."

It was reported that the Huntington council did this coup thing — if it was a coup thing — at 3:45 a.m. on Tuesday.

You're left to wonder how they could do anything sudden or forceful at that hour except fall off the council chair.

Most people are so dazed at that hour they couldn't even overthrow an ink blotter. At that time of morning, I even have trouble finding the bathroom light switch.

IF HUNTINGTON BEACH officialdom was going to overthrow the government, the least they could do would be to wait until a decent time of day so a few people would be awake to enjoy it.

Revolutions at 3:45 in the morning show a definite lack of consideration for the people being revolutionized.

After this historic council session finally lurched off to a conclusion, Mayor Ruth Bailey said the nice thing about it was that when it was all over, the council persons didn't end up hating each other.

You can understand that. It's hard to hate somebody when your eyeballs have glazed over.

Bailed out

Gerald C. Meyers, chairman of American Motors, speaks to stockholders following approval of a takeover by Renault in exchange for $200 million in new capital. At least 92 percent voted in favor of the move.

Oil price boosts unfair, says U.S.

NEW YORK (AP) — The new round of oil price increases announced by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries is unfair to the industrial world, U.S. officials say.

"We do not consider these increases to be justified, particularly in the light of the good record of the United States and the industrial world in general in restraining demand," White House Press Secretary Jody Powell said.

"WE ARE EXTREMELY disappointed by OPEC's decision," said Energy Secretary Charles W. Duncan Jr., who cited "the fragility of today's worldwide economic conditions."

OPEC's decision to let the price of a 42-gallon barrel of oil climb as much as $4, to a maximum of $41, was announced Tuesday after a two-day conference of oil ministers in Bali, Indonesia.

Saudi Arabia already has raised its oil price from $30 to $32 a barrel, and analysts say the other 12 OPEC members are likely to raise prices to the cartel's new limits.

Those moves would push the average price of OPEC oil from about $32 to $35 a barrel. The U.S. Energy Department forecast that the average U.S. price of a gallon of gasoline or heating oil would go up a nickel.

OPEC, SUPPLIER OF 26 percent of the oil used in the United States, has been in disarray since the Iranian revolution in 1978 sharply reduced that nation's oil output and sent world oil prices spiraling more than 150 percent as buyers scrambled for scarce supplies.

OPEC's oil ministers agreed to let the cartel's old $37-a-barrel top price, now charged by hawkish Libya, Nigeria and Algeria, climb to $41. Analysts said the three African countries, whose two million barrels-a-day exports to the United States account for 12 percent of U.S. petroleum needs, were likely to announce $4-a-barrel hikes.

In Zurich, Switzerland, adding to the pessimistic outlook, Oil Minister Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani was quoted as saying oil prices of $50 a barrel by next spring are "not at all excluded" unless the West reviews its oil stockpiling policy.

Yamani reportedly predicted a "mood of panic" on markets if the war between Iraq and Iran lasts "much longer."

Fatal beating

Cop acquitted in conspiracy

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A federal jury has acquitted a white former Florida policeman of four counts of conspiring to cover up the fatal beating of a black Miami businessman a year ago.

The civil rights trial of Charles Veverka Jr. in the death of insurance executive Arthur McDuffie had been moved from Miami, then Atlanta and then New Orleans because of fears that a verdict might ignite racial tensions in each of those cities.

Jurors in San Antonio deliberated for 16 hours over three days following a week-long trial. Late Tuesday they reported they were "hopelessly" deadlocked 11-1, but the judge sent them back Wednesday with instructions to try again.

FOUR OTHER WHITE Dade County police officers were acquitted on state murder and manslaughter charges last May by an all-white jury in Tampa. At that trial the 30-year-old Veverka was granted immunity and testified that police had brutally beaten McDuffie, then falsified reports to make it seem as if he died in a motorcycle accident.

Racial rioting broke out in Miami when word of the Tampa verdict spread, ending in 18 deaths and $100 million damage.

Dade County authorities set up barricades to keep white motorists out of predominantly black areas, but reported only isolated rock-throwing incidents Wednesday night.

AS THE VERDICT was read, Veverka's head sagged, and his chief defense attorney, Denis Dean, put his arm around the defendant.

"When I heard the jury was deadlocked 11-1, I honestly thought it was 11 for guilty and one not guilty," Veverka said. "I'm happy, naturally, which is probably the biggest understatement in the world. It is the best Christmas present I could have."

Veverka said he intended to cooperate in any investigation of the coverup of McDuffie's death. Federal prosector Brian McDonald said the investigation would continue, but he declined comment on what impact the verdict would have on further prosecution.

U.S. District Judge William Hoeveler ordered jufors not to talk to anyone about the case.

The jury, which included one black and five Mexican-Americans, acquitted Veverka of being an accessory in the beating and coverup, conspiring to be an accessory, conspiring to falsify documents and falsifying documents. If convicted on all counts, he could have received a maximum 26 years in prison and a $21,500 fine.

VEVERKA WAS a 6½-year veteran of the Dade County police force in Miami when he disputed official reports that McDuffie had died from injuries in a motorcycle accident. He said he decided on Christmas day to come foward with the truth.

Trial testimony said that six to eight officers beat McDuffie after a high-speed chase on Miami streets. Veverka testified he only struck the victim once, and tried to pull McDuffie away from other officers beating him with flashlights and nightsticks.

The prosecution introduced a sworn statement by Veverka indicating he falsified police reports to make McDuffie's injuries look like an accident.

Teacher poisoned

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — A 13-year-old junior high school student has been charged in a juvenile court delinquency petition with aggravated assault after allegedly poisoning her teacher's coffee, officials say.

The teacher, Neal A. Schwabauer, 34, of Newton, was treated at a Wichita hospital and released after taking a drink of coffee spiked with a highly toxic solvent, authorities said.

The Truesdell Junior High School student acknowledged putting ethylene dichloride in Schwabauer's coffee when he left his shop class for a moment Monday, authorities said.

The girl was not identified because of her age.

New campus for college

SAN MATEO (AP) — The state's far-flung community college system has a new "campus" whose borders extend as far as the Philippines and Iceland.

Actually, Los Angeles Metropolitan College doesn't bring any new students into the system immediately, but is a consolidation of programs for more than 30,000 students now attending classes at military bases.

Anne-Marie McCartan, spokeswoman for the colleges' statewide Board of Governors, said that the board established the two-year college to simplify administration of the overseas programs and provide a base for future expansion.

Gas utilities to refund $335.2 million

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) – Refunds totalling $335.2 million will be going out to customers of Southern California Gas Co. and San Diego Gas and Electric Co., the state Public Utilities Commission says.

The refund action was one of several the commission took Tuesday. It also approved higher lifeline gas allowances for multiple sclerosis victims and took back approval of a Pacific Telephone rate increase.

The refunds reflect overcollections for natural gas use made by the utilities in four periods between January 1973 and May 1979.

For SoCal Gas residential customers, the refunds will average about $12.75. For commercial customers, the refunds will average about $137.50. They will be made as credits on customers' February bills, with refund checks to be mailed to eligible former commercial and industrial customers.

No refunds are contemplated for former residential customers.

San Diego Gas customers will get an average of $14 per residential user and $116 for each small commercial customer. These involve refunds made by Southern California Gas, which is the San Diego utility's supplier.

Refunds will be reflected as a credit in January 1981 bills, with checks mailed to eligible former commercial customers. Former residential customers will not get refunds.

San Diego Gas will evaluate all requests from former and active customers through June 1981 who either didn't get refunds or contend they should be larger.

In other action, the PUC approved additional lifeline allowances, varying by geographical region, for MS victims. The action complies with a law signed in July. The increases were already given to customers who depend on life-support equipment and for paralysis victims who have greater heating and cooling requirements.

Lifeline allowances are the levels of gas and electricity the commission says are needed to supply the minimum monthly needs of the average residence.

Illegal aliens back pay slated

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Operators of vast avocado groves say they will pay a dozen illegal alien farm workers from Mexico minimum pay and $33,000 in back pay after their firing, according to a labor board attorney.

Attorney Nancy Kirk of the California Agricultural Labor Relations Board said owners who signed the agreement Tuesday agreed to comply with all state and federal labor laws, including providing the undocumented workers a minimum wage of $3.10 an hour and overtime.

In addition, the owners say they will provide checks instead of cash payments, work breaks, accurate pay records, notices telling workers their rights and a 24-hour phone number for emergencies.

The workers were fired July 22 for complaining about their working conditions and treatment, Kirk said. According to the agreement in the suit filed by the state board, each of the 12 will receive $2,750 in back pay and their jobs back.

Approval is needed by the state ALRB, which is expected to meet in Sacramento this weekend.

No health risk seen in spraying

SACRAMENTO (AP) — California officials say there is no health risk in the planned aerial insecticide spraying to kill the Mediterranean fruit fly in Santa Clara County.

"An average-size adult would have to ingest almost the entire amount applied to an acre to receive a potentially lethal dose," the state health department said in a report Wednesday.

"The greatest health risk may come from the large, low-flying planes and the possibility of a crash in an urban area," officials said.

THE REPORT WAS sent by the Department of Health Services to state Food and Agriculture Director Richard Rominger. His department and the U.S. Department of Agriculture want to spray Malathion over 115 square miles by Jan. 31.

City councils in Palo Alto, Mountain View and Santa Clara, as well as the Santa Clara County Board of Supervisors, have voted against the spraying.

The fly, which destroys fruit by laying its eggs inside, was spotted in mostly urban Santa Clara County in June. Farmers fear it will spread to the San Joaquin Valley and destroy more crops.

THE HEALTH REPORT said Malthion has been used extensively for 30 years, mainly by home gardeners and for mosquito abatement, and has a "low level of acute toxicity."

The department found no clear evidence of birth defects or gene mutations and estimated the risk of cancer to the exposed Santa Clara County population at one in a billion.

Tax collections, surplus dwindle

SACRAMENTO (AP) — Sagging retail sales and high interest rates are being blamed for sharper-than-expected drops in revenues and the state surplus during the last five months.

Officials reported a decline of $135 million in statewide retail sales — to $2.7 billion — compared to the July-November period last year.

John Jervis, a spokesman for state Controller Ken Cory, said it is the first such decline in recent memory this late in the fiscal year.

Cory said the figures "confirm what was been predicted in recent months — that the state's surplus will be nearly exhausted by mid-1981."

"Even a recovery in the economy and resulting higher sales tax receipts cannot reverse the general fund downward trend," he said.

Cory and Finance Director Mary Ann Graves issued similar but not identical estimates of state revenues for the five months. Ms. Graves said state agencies received $7.3 billion during the period, which is nearly $230 million, or 3 percent, below forecasts in May.

Cory reported revenues of $7.5 billion and said they were 5 percent below May estimates.

Missile test 'fails'

POINT MUGU, (AP) — A Tomahawk cruise missile fired from a submerged submarine plunged into the Pacific Ocean moments after breaking the surface because its parachute recovery system opened too soon, the Navy said.

The cigar-shaped missile was supposed to skim along the water above the Pacific Missile Test Range off the Southern California coast, but crashed Tuesday afternoon near San Clemente Island, said Ray Lucasey, a spokesman for the Joint Cruise Missiles Project here.

Offshore oil, gas

Drill lease delay urged

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The California Coastal Commission has urged the federal government to delay granting offshore oil and gas drilling leases for 279 square miles off Southern California to protect sea otters.

If the U.S. Department of Interior doesn't agree to the delay and authorize further environmental studies of the Santa Maria basin area, which extends from Point Conception off Santa Barbara to Morro Bay, no drilling leases should be allowed, the commission unanimously decided.

STATE

"There is a very high resource potential for that area," said commission spokeswoman Kati Corsaut, "but the problem is an oil spill is really devastating to sea otters."

Gates denied leave of absence

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Police Chief Daryl Gates says he will have to evaluate a decision by the Board of Police Commissioners denying him a 90-day leave of absence before he will know how that affects his possible bid for mayor.

GATES

Gates sidestepped questions on whether he would retire as chief to run for mayor — a course suggested by several of the four commissioners who attended Tuesday's meeting.

The commission, observing the need for strong leadership within the police department during a time of spiraling major crime, acted unanimously to deny the request as the city's murder toll for the year edged toward the 1,000 mark.

Continental pickets withdraw

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Pickets have been withdrawn after Continental Airlines and striking flight attendants reached a tentative back-to-work agreement and the airline said flight schedules were on their way back to normal.

But airline and union officials said Tuesday a return to work could not begin before Saturday, when the last of a series of union ratification votes are taken.

Vote count issue continues

SACRAMENTO (AP) — Recount winner Pat Johnston, a Democrat, is now certified to take the Assembly seat of sworn-in Republican Adrian Fondse — but the GOP says it wants yet another count.

A lawyer for Secretary of State March Fong Eu, Tony Miller, handed Johnston a certificate of election Tuesday morning. Fondse, a Ripon rancher and former San Joaquin County supervisor, had apparently won the election by 21 votes, although the unofficial morning-after count was 69. The official recount put Johnston 35 votes ahead.

Compromise bails out HB developer

The South Coast Regional Coastal Commission has fallen short of State Coastal Act philosophy by allowing the developers of a Huntington Beach commercial and marina center to eliminate a proposed hotel.

The developers offered to eliminate the 72-unit hotel to make amends for alleged overbuilding of the Peter's Landing Center located at Pacific Coast Highway and Anderson Street in the Huntington Harbour area.

Parking spaces for the often overloaded parking lot will replace the proposed hotel.

But the decision by the Regional Coastal Commission reverses its own mandate of 1976 that required the hotel to be a "visitor-serving facility" for the coastline.

A report from the state attorney general's office indicates developers of the center exceeded Regional Coastal Commission permits by 20,000 square feet and could be fined or ordered to tear down buildings.

But at the meeting last month, commissioners indicated that poor permit recording and missing files have confused the issue. Commissioners also indicated that this confusion forced the somewhat one-sided compromise that will alleviate a parking problem by allowing developers to eliminate a hotel they never wanted to build.

Although the visitor-serving requirement of the State Coastal Act was eliminated, the commissioners did not over-react and approve a staff recommendation that the developers be ordered to build a hotel elsewhere in the coastal zone.

The commission unanimously rejected the recommendation as unreasonable.

The whole controversy could have been avoided by reasonable bookkeeping.

Bands on the march

There seems to be almost no end to recognition and national exposure for West Orange County high school bands.

Huntington Beach High School started it off by marching in Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade in New York.

Edison High School has been selected to perform in the Tournament of Roses in Pasadena on Jan. 1.

And to cap it all is the selection of the Fountain Valley High School band to march in President-elect Ronald Reagan's inauguration parade in Washington, D.C., on Jan. 20.

Reagan and the Fountain Valley band are no strangers. The local band performed at his political rally earlier this year at Mile Square Park.

But the Baron band was picked by Reagan's inauguration committee based on its performance and by videotapes, photographs and scrapbooks detailing accomplishments.

The big challenge now facing the 150 bandsmen and members of the tall flag group is raising $90,000 to finance the trip.

Band director Frank Barnes and some parents say they will mortgage their homes to raise money if need be.

But donations have been reported flowing in, both from private industry and private citizens who are mailing in money from Santa Barbara to San Diego.

That kind of spirit of sacrifice and generosity says much for the band's success.

We'll indeed be proud to be watching the Baron band performing in the capital on Jan. 20.

Campus cooler

Consistency has not always been a hallmark of city police patrols at Huntington Beach's 51 public school campuses.

Different officers handled different calls, and repeat offenders could claim time and again that they had never been in trouble before.

In September, with the blessing of local school districts, the police launched a pilot program that placed two officers on a schools beat exclusively.

The pair, officers Steve Mack and J.B. Hume, divide up the campuses and keep an eye out for everything from drug sales to traffic offenses. They also concentrate on reducing the vandalism and burglaries that traditionally plague residential neighborhoods surrounding schools.

More than half of the serious crimes committed in California are attributed to juveniles. It is logical to focus some special attention on the school campuses where young people spend much of their time.

Because of their daily patrols, the school officers have become acquainted with regular campus troublemakers. At the same time, their frequent appearances gradually are helping them win the respect of many law-abiding students.

Thus far, the school patrol program appears to be accomplishing its aims. If this trend continues through the remainder of the one-year tryout, the police department should consider making these beats permanent.

Boyd/Musical trick

By L.M. BOYD

Musicians learn early that they can quiet down a noisy audience simply by playing softly. You don't get that kind of racket in the concert halls, not usually. But it happens often in the Las Vegas-type clubs. And the performers need all their tricks to put in a good night's work. The harmonica whiz Larry Adler specializes in it. He manages his audience by the way he plays the instrument.

Q. Didn't golfer Jack Nicklaus have polio?

A. Yes, at age 13, but without paralysis.

Not every man who's losing his hair cares to be referred to as Old Baldy. There are one or two presumably, who'd rather be known by the scientific term as an oligotrichiac.

Sport show sales show that lady joggers like a white-with-blue-trim running shoe while men joggers prefer a blue-with-white-trim shoe.

Q. What's the international distress signal, if any, for an airplane downed in the wilderness?

A. Three fires about 50 feet apart in a triangle.

Civil defense efforts founder

WASHINGTON — Ronald Reagan's vice president-elect, George Bush, asserted during the primary campaign that a nuclear war was in fact winnable. But the government agency most directly responsible for safeguarding the American populace from a nuclear holocaust emphatically disagrees.

The underfunded, overlooked Federal Emergency Management Agency is charged with protection of the American people in the event that Soviet nuclear bombs start raining down on the continental United States. But a confidential FEMA report — prepared under contract by the National Governors' Association — makes clear that our preparations for civil defense can be summed up in one word: deplorable.

Indeed, Defense Department assessments cited in the FEMA report estimate that, in our present state of civil defense disarray, "some 160 million people would be killed by an attack." The Pentagon didn't even try to guess what additional injuries would be sustained by those who survived an enemy nuclear strike.

MEANWHILE, of course, our intelligence agencies report that the Soviet Union has intensified its efforts in recent years to improve its civil defense program. And as FEMA has learned in its unsuccessful efforts to get support for its programs, critics insist that an adequate civil defense setup can lead the military to think the unthinkable — that nuclear war is a reasonable option.

"There is a general overestimation by the American public about national civil defense planning and funding," the FEMA report states, adding: "National policy has been equivocal, and guidance from the federal level has been negligible."

In particular, the document discloses an appalling lack of cooperation between Washington and the 50 state governments, which are ultimately responsible for the safety of the public in a nuclear attack.

"Governors and citizens trust that the federal government is planning for the major programs dealing with an attack," the secret report notes, adding bluntly: "That is a delusion."

Here are some of the basic problems perceived by the civil defense agency:

— POPULATION relocation. The primary method envisioned so far by our planners to save lives in case of enemy attack is the movement of huge numbers of people from target areas — what FEMA calls "Crisis Relocation Planning." The trouble is that many of the state officials who would have to carry out this logistical nightmare have concluded simply that it won't work.

— Communications. "Governors in general do not know how they will be notified if an attack is imminent," the report states. "Will there be individual telephone calls from the president? From the Department of Defense? From FEMA?" Many governors don't even have the security clearance that would entitle them to the latest intelligence estimates. They might — like ordinary citizens — have to depend on the media for their information.

— "CONTINUITY of leadership." Preparation of self-sufficient emergency centers for local and national leaders is viewed as a necessity by the civil defense planners. There are thousands of these "emergency operating centers" now in existence, dating back to the days following the Cuban missile crisis in 1962. These centers should be blast-resistant and equipped with reliable communications systems. But the FEMA report found that most of these centers are in pitiful condition, and would be useless in the event of nuclear attack.

GATHERING NUTS: Throughout its history, the Federal Bureau of Investigation has had to keep tabs on an incredible number of cuckoos, and until his death in 1972 Director J. Edgar Hoover wanted to be kept informed on all of them.

One far-out organization that drew the FBI's — and Hoover's — attention was the "Silver Shirts of America," a Nazi-like group founded by one William Pelley in Asheville, N.C. Anti-Semitic and anti-communist, it flourished in the 1930s and numbered thousands of adherents. Pelley made a comfortable living writing publications and selling uniforms.

According to a "personal and confidential" letter to Hoover from the Charlotte, N.C., FBI office in the early 1930s, an unidentified Oregonian had received a visionary "ray of light" some years previously, predicting that "first, a great national figure would (die) in a seeming air accident; second, a powerful figure in politics would be assassinated; third, a man would come forth and boldly enter the lists on a platform of Christ and the Constitution."

The first predictions conceivably came true: Humorist Will Rogers died in a plane crash in August 1935, and Sen. Huey Long was assassinated a month later.

Pelley, of course, viewed himself as the third man in the prediction. He died in the 1960s, still under J. Edgar Hoover's watchful eye.

Who is responsible for all the killing?

To the Editor:

The controversy goes on — who is responsible for the deaths of: King, Kennedy and now Lennon? You must also include all the small children who on their way home from school, get murdered for no obvious reason.

There is no "obvious" or public mourning for Lisa Rosales. Only her family are lighting candles, and they are not marching down the Sunset Strip or playing Beatles' records. They are just heartbroken that someone would destroy a beautiful 7-year-old, a beautiful Black leader, a wonderful President.

Where does this all end? Who will take the responsibility for all this decadence? Will taking away guns from the public do it? (Doubtful).

Legislation is only effective with law-abiding citizens; what about the other faction? They get seven years at our expense and are released to repeat their previous errors.

So who is responsible for all this? I guess we are — would you believe?

Applause

To the Editor:

Re The Associated Press article titled "Man's for Animals," dated Sunday, Dec. 14, I would like to give a good round of applause for Michael Fox.

His enlightened attitude on the treatment of animals in this country, especially those used for human consumption, i.e. veal calves, chickens and swine, is one with which I can highly identify.

He is neither a vegetarian nor an antivivisectionist, but a humane, compassionate veterinarian.

Long may his banner wave!

MYRNA YOUNG

Misinformation

To the Editor:

With the death last week of John Lennon, who led, perhaps, the most public life of any man of the last 20 years, we were indeed shocked by the number of factual errors made by the news media regarding his life and career. For example:

— Several writers have cited the lyrics "the dream is over" (from Lennon's 1970 album "Plastic Ono Band") to sum up his death, incorrectly referring to it as a song title. The song in which those lyrics appeared was titled "God."

— Cleave Herman, of KFWB radio, identified Paul McCartney as the Beatles' lead guitarist and George Harrison as their bassist. The reverse is true.

— CBS News identified George Martin as the manager of the Beatles. He was their producer.

Obviously, John Lennon should not be made out to be more than he actually was. (The rock press will undoubtedly be calling him a god.) However, he was in fact a great musician, composer, and tireless worker for peace and social justice. He cared about us. We only wish that the people reporting his death would have cared enough about him to chronicle his life accurately.

Gun laws

To the Editor:

Having just read your Dec. 10 editorial on "Guns Still Killing," I got a little mad. I wondered if you or your paper were aware of some of the following facts. First, all guns are registered with the federal government and have been for almost 12 years. (1968 Federal Gun Control Act.)

However, when it comes to handguns, they are registered with both the state and federal governments. The state of California has a 15-day mandatory waiting period on the purchase of a handgun, from the time of purchase to the time a person can pick up the gun.

DURING THIS time each person is run through the C.I.& I. (Criminal Identification and Investigation) computers in Sacramento to make it legal for him or her to purchase a handgun. The buyer must be able to pass both state and federal questions before being able to purchase and pick up (after 15 days) a handgun.

Also, any person who buys two or more handguns in a seven-day period has his or her name sent to the local federal A.T.F. (Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms) office. When any person purchases a handgun a copy of the state form is sent to that person's chief of police in the city or town they live in. At the present time, the state of California has on its books a law that makes it a five-year jail sentence if a handgun is used in the committing of a crime. This law or jail sentence is one of the first things thrown out by our liberal judges when a criminal who has used a handgun in a crime comes up before them. It's called plea bargaining.

Please, we have more than enough laws on the books at the present time; let's just enforce them. I feel just as bad as the next person when there are needless murders and killings, but I don't think more legislation is the answer. I feel we have a problem in the courts and the criminal justice system. Let's work on them.

Flag disgraced

To the Editor:

We were told at Louisiana Pacific on Bristol Street in Costa Mesa that their flag was at half mast for John Lennon!

This is a disgrace to our flag and our country and all the noble loyal citizens who put their lives on the line every day for America and her people.

I called the store and the general office and was informed that he was a national hero to some people. What a sick society — I knew it was bad, but this disgrace to our flag tops it.

Spending hints

To the Editor:

After attending the Dec. 2 meeting of the Huntington Beach Union High School Board of Education, I have concluded that the board wants the chickens who are left to decide how the fox should behave in the future. For the past several years, the board, under the direction of Dr. Abbott, has been raiding the chicken coop, and now that the money, as they claim, is gone, the board is asking the teachers to find out where it went and how the board, in the future, might be more careful with the limited resources left.

The public should be aware that the district has in its employ several highly paid "experts" in the field of school finance but due to their manipulations with magic pencils and rubber figures, the board itself can't figure out where the money is being spent. And then, when a committee of teachers who, after teaching 180 or more students a day, have gone through the budget, the board doesn't believe the facts.

I HAVE a few ideas of where the money was spent — the building of a high school that the voters turned down several times; two expensive moves of the district office that required substantial (and in some instances, luxurious) remodeling; the purchase of a telephone system that breaks down regularly (when we could "rent" a system from General Telephone without a large capital outlay); a salary for the superintendent that is greater than that of the governor; expense accounts and travel expenses for district staff; and a proliferation of district personnel that is directly in proportion to the decrease in money allocated for the schools.

I can also suggest where the money should have been spent. If the district had to divest iself of over $3 million in order to qualify for Proposition 13 bail-out money, why didn't they stock up on paper, desks, books, cleaning supplies, typewriters, industrial arts machinery, library books — in other words, items that could be used by students?

Americans no longer leave the door 'on the latch'

In the house where I grew up, it was our custom to leave the front door on the latch at night. I don't know if that was a local term or if it is universal; "on the latch" meant that the door was closed but not locked. None of us carried keys; the last one in for the evening would close up, and that was it.

Those days are over, of course. In rural areas as well as in the cities, doors do not stay unlocked, even for part of an evening. Suburbs and country areas are, in many ways, even more vulnerable than well patrolled urban streets. Some recent police statistics show the crime rate rising more dramatically in those allegedly tranquil areas than in the cities. At any rate, the era of leaving the front door on the latch is over, no matter where we live.

It has been replaced by deadbolt locks and security chains and electronic alarm systems and trip-wires hooked up to the local police station or a private guard firm. Many suburban families I know have sliding glass doors on their patios, with steel bars elegantly built in so no one can pry those sliding doors open. It is not uncommon, in the most pleasant of homes, to see pasted on the windows decals announcing that the premises are under surveillance by this security force or that guard company.

THE LOCK IS the new symbol of America. Indeed, a recent public service advertisement by a large insurance company featured not actuarial charts, but a picture of a child's bicycle with the now-usual padlock attached to it. The ad pointed out that, yes, it is the insurance companies that pay for stolen goods, but who is going to pay for what the new atmosphere of distrust and fear is doing to our way of life? Who is going to make the psychic payment for the transformation of America from the Land of the Free to the Land of the Lock?

For that is what has happened. We have become so used to defending ourselves against the new atmosphere of American life, so used to putting up barriers, that we have not had time to think about what it may mean. For some reason we are satisfied when we think we are well-protected; it does not occur to us to ask ourselves: Why has this happened? Why are we having to barricade ourselves against our neighbors and fellow citizens, and when, exactly, did this start to take over our lives?

And it has taken over. If you work for a medium- to large-size company, chances are that you don't just wander in and out of work. You probably carry some kind of access card, electronic or otherwise, that allows you in and out of your place of work. Maybe the security guard at the front desk knows your face and will wave you in most days, but the fact remains that the business you work for feels threatened enough to keep outsiders away via these modern "keys."

IT WASN'T ALWAYS like this. Even a decade ago, most private businesses had a policy of free access. It simply didn't occur to managers that the proper thing to do was to distrust people. Certainly there were people out there who might have harm in mind, but they were the exception. The norm, the people it was assumed would be coming in the building, were presumed to be all right. Now it is the opposite that is true. The assumption is that anyone who might wander in without a reason is a cause for concern; danger.

Look at the airports. Parents used to take their children out to departure gates to watch planes land and take off. That's all gone. Airports are no longer a place of education and fun; they are the most sophisticated of our security encampments. With electronic X-ray equipment we seem finally to have figured out a way to hold the terrorists, real and imagined, at bay; it was such a relief to solve this problem that we did not think much about what such a state of affairs says about the quality of our lives. We now pass through these electronic friskers without so much as a sideways glance; the machines, and what they stand for, have won.

OUR NEIGHBORHOODS are bathed in high-intensity light; we do not want to afford ourselves even so much a luxury as a shadow. Businessmen, in increasing numbers, are purchasing new machines that hook up to the telephone and analyze a caller's voice. The machines are supposed to tell the businessman, with a small margin of error, whether his friend or client is telling lies.

All of this is being done in the name of "security"; that is what we tell ourselves. We are fearful, and so we devise ways to lock the fear out, and that, we decide, is what security means.

But no; with all this "security," we are perhaps the most insecure nation in the history of civilized man.

We trust no one. Suburban housewives wear rape whistles on their station wagon keychains. We have become so smart about self-protection that, in the end, we have all outsmarted ourselves. We may have locked the evils out, but, in so doing, we have locked ourselves in. We have been so afraid that the most menacing forces of our society would take away our freedom to live in peace that, in attempting to combat those forces, we have removed that very freedom on our own.

That may be the legacy we remember best when we look back on this age: That in dealing with the unseen horrors that lurked among us, we became prisoners of ourselves. All of us prisoners, in this time of our troubles.

Oakland irate at image

TV program's portrayal draws city anger

OAKLAND (AP) — A television comedy's portrayal of Oakland as a crime-ridden, dirty city has drawn an official protest and threats of a lawsuit from the City Council.

The council voted unanimously Tuesday to protest to the ABC network and to the Federal Communications Commission about a recent episode of the "Too Close for Comfort" situation comedy.

City Attorney Michael Lawson was told to study possible legal action and Councilman Wilson Riles Jr. suggested that city residents boycott the show.

DURING THE disputed episode, two teen-agers moved from their family's house in San Francisco into an Oakland apartment.

Their landlord turned out to be a drug dealer. Bookies inhabited the room across the hall. Dirt flowed from their water tap. They kept a baseball bat behind the door for fear of intruders and lived with the constant sound of sirens from the streets outside.

When the teen-agers tired of the experience and returned home, their father said to their mother, "They're home Muriel. They slipped over the Oakland border and made their escape."

Oakland Tribune television critic Rick Malaspina complained in today's edition that the program "was as good-natured as planting a hatchet between someone's shoulder blades." He received numerous protests from outraged Oakland residents about the show, he said.

But Arne Sultan of Don El Productions in Los Angeles defended his show.

"On comedy shows it's routine to take good-natured swipes at certain cities," he told Malaspina. "Since our show is set in San Francisco, we use every chance we get to rap Los Angeles. We've rapped New York and Bakersfield."

He said he did not believe any apology was necessary.

"I don't think we were offensive," Sultan added.

OAKLAND traditionally has been touchy about its image, overshadowed by the reputation of San Francisco across the bay.

The most famous remark about the city may be that of Oakland native Gertrude Stein: "There is no there there."

Malaspina admitted that "Oakland does have a crime problem, a serious one that's marring the city's many more attractive attributes and dragging down its identity."

Magazine 'stars' rated

NEW YORK (AP) — Blondes flopped, brunettes were hits. Politics was cold, Mount St. Helens was hot. Valerie Bertinelli was the surprise of the year, and Marlo Thomas just kept up the good work.

The game is selling magazines, and putting the right person on the cover can make a big difference in newsstand sales and advertising rates.

Miss Bertinelli was on two of the best-selling covers of the year: an issue of People which sold 500,000 more than People's normal 2.3 million in newsstand sales, and Us, where she drew 850,000 buyers, compared to the average of 712,000.

BUT, SAYS the Daily News, Meryl Streep was a bust for Ladies Home Journal. Jill Clayburgh was a loser for McCall's and "Charlie's Angels" co-star Cheryl Ladd was a disappointment for Us.

Miss Thomas held the interest of Good Housekeeping readers with her marriage to Phil Donahue.

And one blond bucking the trend was Robert Redford, who sold more than 300,000 copies over the 1 million average as the first male cover star in Ladies Home Journal history.

ONE OF Time's best sellers was a cover on Mount St. Helens' eruption that killed 34 in May. President Carter, on inflation, was the loser.

Ronald Reagan was best and worst for Newsweek: a March issue featuring Reagan and his wife Nancy was a bust; the post-election cover of the president-elect was the big seller.

"Ronnie and Nancy just weren't making it then," said a spokesman of the low seller.

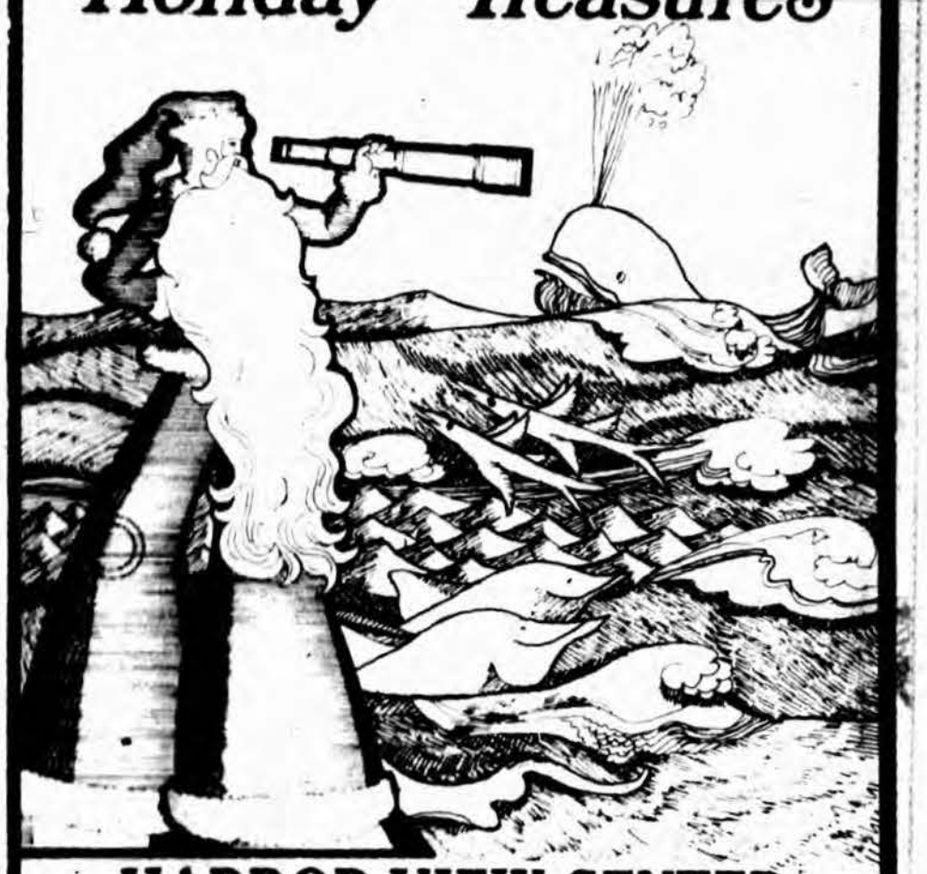

Owner sells 'Pantry'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Original Pantry — a landmark restaurant in downtown Los Angeles, known for its home-cooked meals and long line of customers — has been sold to attorney Richard J. Riordan, according to owner Paul Leuenberger.

He said that escrow will close Jan. 5 for the 24-hour-a-day restaurant, along with the building it occupies, a row of nearby shop buildings and a parking lot across the street.

Leuenberger, who bought the The Pantry from the estate of founder Dewey Logan in 1973, said he has a verbal agreement with Riordan that the restaurant will continue to operate under its present policies and at its present location.

New deans named

GWC relates staff changes

Dr. William F. Shawl of Irvine has been named to the new post of dean of educational development at Golden West College in Huntington Beach.

Shawl, 52, served as Golden West's dean of instruction, and more recently dean of arts, humanities and social sciences. He joined the administration in 1967, coming from Highline College, Seattle.

In other changes:

— GENE TARDY, WESTMINSTER, associate dean of business, technology and public service, will become associate dean of vocational programs and educational development.

— Dr. Betty Dean, Costa Mesa, director of health professions, will become associate dean, replacing Tardy.

— Dr. Angelo Segalla, Santa Ana, assistant dean for instructional and resource development, requested a return to full-time classroom teaching.

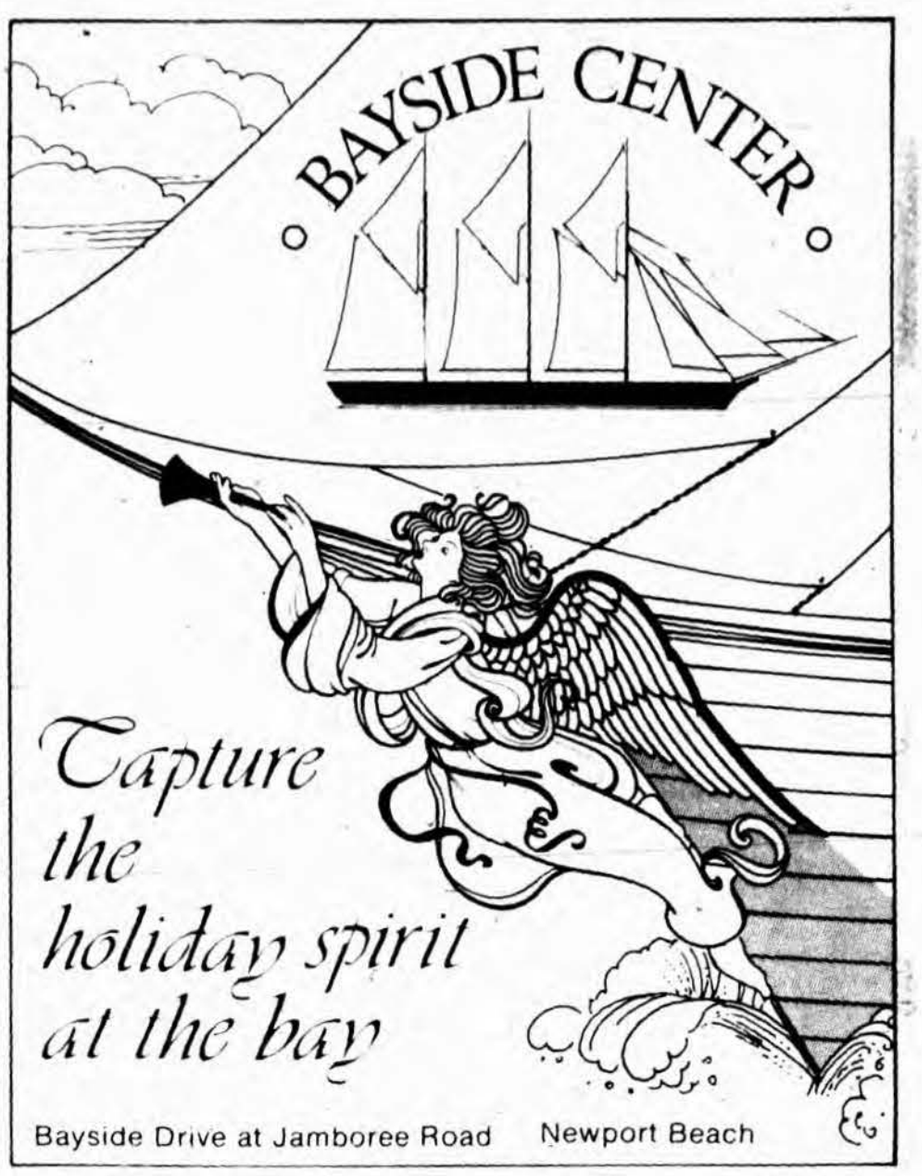

The changes become effective July 1, 1981. Early in the new year, a search will begin to name a new dean of arts, humanities and social sciences, and director of health professions.

AT THE SAME TIME, president Lee Stevens announced establishment of an educational development assistance fund with an initial allocation of $70,000, in 1981-82, to:

— Explore new approaches to the teaching-learning process.

— Assist faculty in staying abreast of their field, undertaking teaching-learning research, designing and carrying out innovations and experiments in the classroom, and acquainting themselves with technological change.

— Explore and test programs, services and procedures which will enhance student accessibility to a college education.

City raps sex film shooting

RICHMOND (AP) — Upset by reports that its city is the backdrop for an X-rated film, the Richmond City Council has asked the police and district attorney to see if legal action can be taken against a film company.

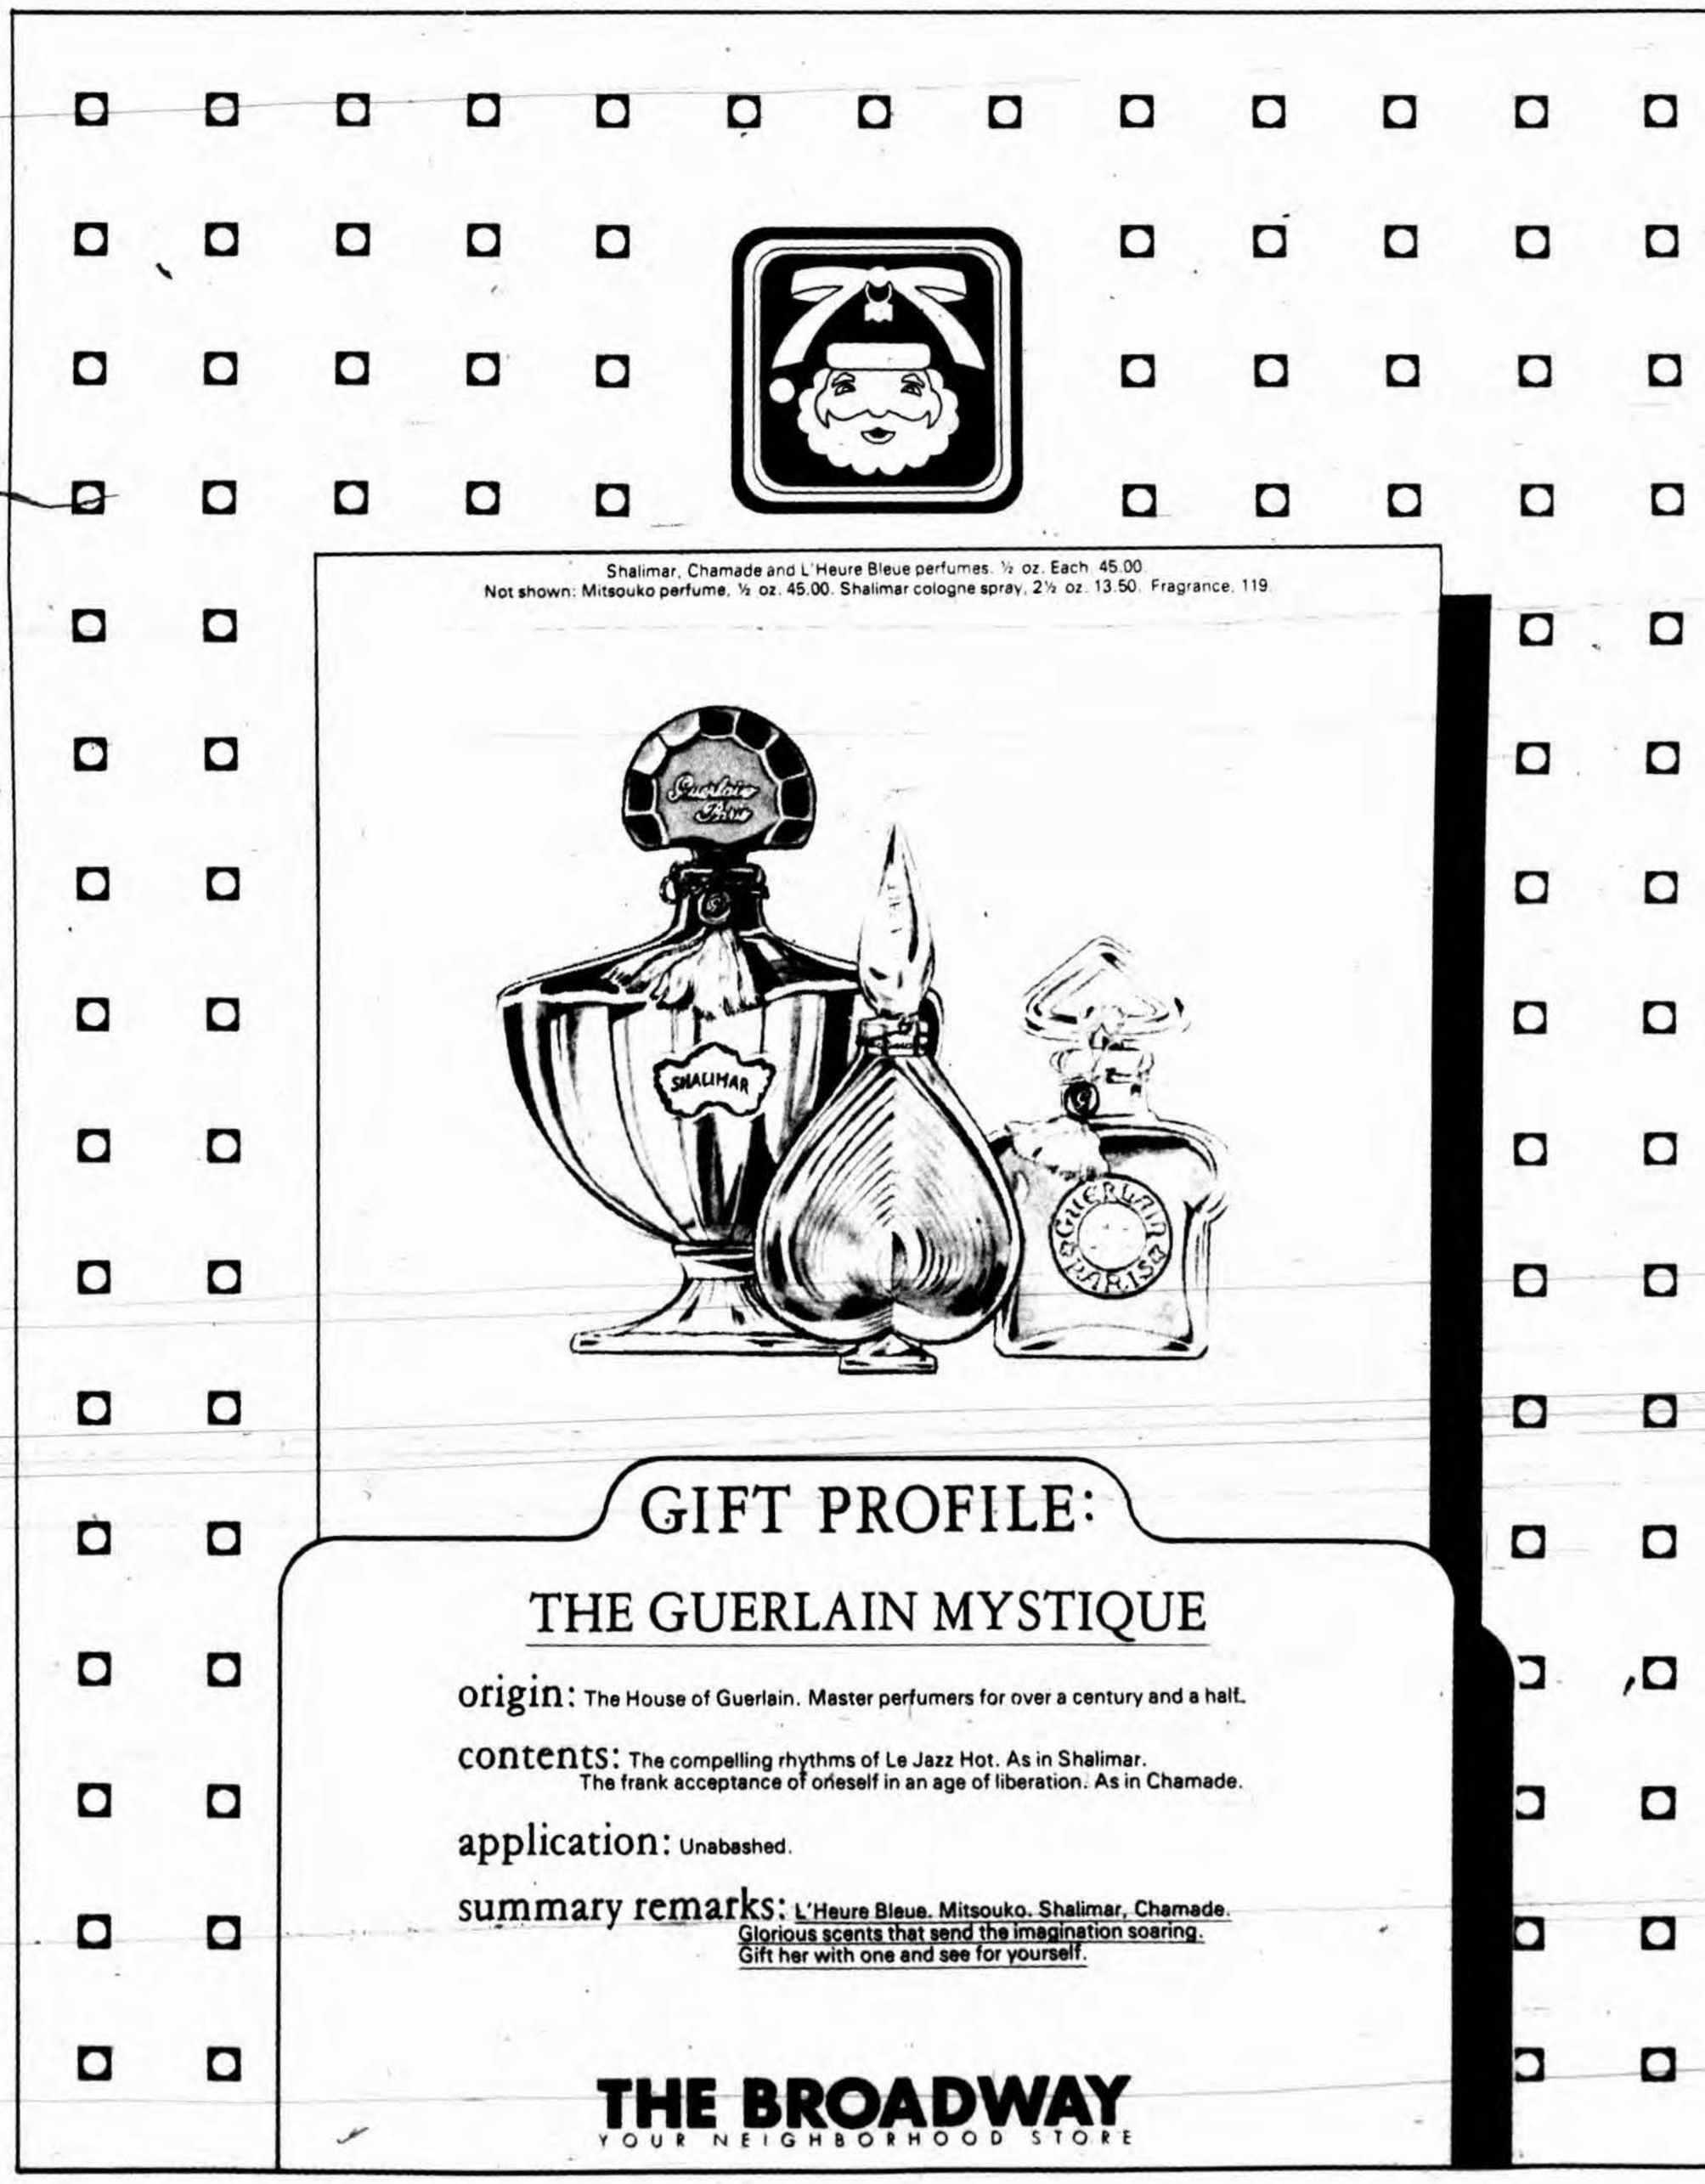

The action came after Mayor Lonnie Washington said he didn't think the council had the power to order the film company out of town, as Councilman Albert Silva suggested.

Film production manager Ricky Frazier has consistently denied that the movie being shot in the city's colorful Point Richmond district is pornographic.

But the Richmond Independent said a copy of the script synopsis it had obtained described sexually explicit scenes and it noted that the female lead is X-rated film star Georgina Spelvin.

Local officials, including the police and the Chamber of Commerce, helped Frazier during shooting of the film after he told them their "quaint little town" was perfect for the movie about "three guys in a song and dance group and their shrewd manager."

After reports about the film's contents surfaced, the Point Richmond Business Association condemned the shooting.

Dazzle 'em with verbiage

Yule host tells how to be success

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

RIDGEFIELD, Conn. — The round of holiday parties, eggnog bashes, Wassail bowl drinky-poos and similar seasonal glass draining klatches already is upon us.

Once again here at Hardscribble House, where an air of Dickensian hospitality prevails throughout the Twelve Days of Christmas, we are conducting our quick course in how to dazzle and dominate conversationally amid the holly and the hors d'oeuvres.

It is all a matter of verbal footwork. Get in fast with the mot juste and back off numbly before anyone realizes you don't know what you're talking about or that once you have said it, whatever you have said, you have said it all.

FOR INSTANCE, THE HOSTESS asks what will you have to drink.

"A dry martini," you reply. "You know, it was William Somerset Maugham's favorite drink. Laced with absinthe. Claimed he needed one before he could face his wife. Strange chap, old Willie. Had such little confidence in his writing, he once wanted to return to medical school for a refresher course and sign on as a ship's surgeon. Of course right after that a manuscript reader for Doubleday named Sinclair Lewis urged the publication of 'Of Human Bondage.' Now there in one serving, shaken well and poured over cracked ice, happens to be the sum total of my knowledge of Maugham. Delivered with gusto and a deprecating little smile, it has served me well at many a suburban blast, except for one conversational disaster when I misread the audience. "Yea, I know," yawned an acidic retired broker who bored us the rest of the evening, "you told us that at a party a month ago right here in this house."

Mulligan's Stew

ANYHOW, THE TRICK IS TO BLINK in and blink out like the Christmas tree lights with your little bursts of brilliance. Keep changing your delivery to keep the listener off balance.

Age seems to fascinate people.

"Someone as youthful as you can never grow old," you flatter the most decrepit fossil in the room. "After all, what does old mean" Cato the Elder decided to learn Greek at 80. Grandma Moses didn't begin painting until she was 78."

Now, of course, is the time to get the conversational ball bouncing in another direction, having exhausted your supply of geriatric wunderkind.

"Speaking of Grandma Moses," you interject, it is not really essential that anyone was speaking of her, "Grandma's maiden name was Anna Mary Robertson."

YOU ARE NOW CENTER STAGE to do your little pre-prepared shtik on names.

"Just last night," you say with a coy chuckle, "I was listening to some Christmas carols sung by Henry John Deutschendorf Jr. Of course, most of you folks know him by his show biz name: John Denver. And I'll bet you'd recognize Issur Danielovitch Densky, Doris von Kappelhoff and Eugene Corowitz the minute you saw them on the tube. Only you'd know them by their stage names of Kirk Douglas, Doris Day and Michael Landon.

"I suppose you think Tadeus Wladyslaw Konopka is the Pope's real name" Wrong. It happens to be Ted Knight's. I can understand him changing his name to fit on a movie marquee, but why does a guy born Arnold Dorsey begin making big bucks when he switches his handle to Engelbert Humperdinck?"

Enough on name changing. The time has come to change the subject.

MY SLIGHT STAMMER, WHICH the cup that cheers seems to accelerate, comes accompanied with a few odd facts that serve as a defense mechanism.

"They say the emperor Claudius was a stutterer. So was King George VI."

There you have any number of conversational openers.

For closers, you might try: "Did you know that Hugh Mulligan's real name is Hugh Mulligan? And the A stands for Augustine.

Watch the ennui settle over the party like a big blotchy snowfall.

Where has everyone gone? And why is my wife standing there with the coats? Can it be time to go already?

Cities sinking

PEKING (AP) — Peking, Tianjin and several other Chinese cities are sinking because of the uncontrolled draining of underground water, Chinese scientists say.

The northern coastal city of Tianjin dropped 5.8 feet between 1959 and 1979, geologists reported at a national conference.

The official Xinhua news agency quoted the scientists as saying that Changzhou, an industrial city in Jiangsu province, sank half a foot between 1978 and 1979 and Peking, Xian, Taiyuan, Wuxi, and Ningpo were sinking at varying rates.

Probe refutes 'secret'

LAS VEGAS (AP) — The chairman of the Nevada Gaming Control Board says an investigation has disproved reports of a "secret door" that allowed counting room employes of the MGM Grand Hotel to escape the Nov. 21 fire and take the resort's cash with them.

Richard Bunker said the intensive investigation showed there was no secret door in the casino counting room despite published accounts which alleged part of the casino's bankroll was rescued during the blaze that killed 84.

If true, the existence of the secret door would have violated strict state regulations which prohibit any counting room exits where money might be "skimmed" from the casino.

Bunker said the investigation, which included two lengthy hearings, produced "no evidence" there was ever a secret door at the resort.

Toxic shock researched

New findings told on tampon-linked illness

BOSTON (AP) The risk of toxic shock syndrome is so low that women need not change their tampon using habits unless they have already suffered bouts of the mysterious illness, a federal study concludes.

However, the report by the national Center for Disease Control and another by researchers at the Wisconsin Division of Health indicate that women who have had toxic shock face a high risk of another attack a month or two later.

The reports also say that women who practice some means of artificial birth control seem less likely to contract toxic shock.

THE STUDIES, PUBLISHED IN today's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine, provide the most complete picture of this newly recognized, sometimes fatal illness, which has been associated with wearing tampons during menstruation.

Approximately 50 million American women use tampons. So far, 701 cases of toxic shock have been reported in the United States; 66, or 9 per cent, were fatal.

The Wisconsin report found that 6.2 cases of toxic shock occur each year for every 100,000 women, with the rate two to three times higher among women under 30 than for older women.

"Women who have not had TSS (toxic shock syndrome) have a low risk of its development and probably do not need to change their patterns of tampon use," CDC researchers in Atlanta concluded.

IN AN INTERVIEW, DR. BRUCE Dan, one of the CDC researchers, added: "This disease is very, very rare. Out of the 100 million women out there, only a very small fraction are at risk for toxic shock. To tell the vast majority of American women that they shouldn't wear tampons is totally unwarranted."

Some women did give up tampons this year after a blaze of publicity about toxic shock, despite the disease's relatively low incidence and the lack of explanation as to just what role tampons played.

TSS, first discovered in children in 1975, grabbed national attention in June when contracted by a number of menstruating women. By September, the link to tampon use had been established. Rely, a super-absorbent tampon made by Procter & Gamble, was pulled off the market Sept. 22 after studies showed that more than 60 percent of surveyed TSS victims had used Rely.

The CDC study compared the experiences of 52 toxic shock victims with 52 healthy women. The Wisconsin researchers compared 38 victims with 105 healthy females. Among findings on which the two reports agreed:

— WOMEN MAY MINIMIZE CHANCES of getting toxic shock by using tampons during only part of their period. However, changing them frequently, as some have recommended, does not cut the risk. The Wisconsin doctors said women might actually increase their risk of toxic shock if they replace tampons frequently, because this might damage the vagina's mucuous membrane.

— If a woman has had one encounter with toxic shock syndrome, there is about a 30 percent chance that she will have another attack a month or two later. One woman studied had the illness five times.

> 'To tell the vast majority of American women that they shouldn't wear tampons is totally unwarranted.'

Women who suffer toxic shock are less likely than healthy women to use birth control, but the researchers were at a loss to explain why contraceptives seem to protect women. It seemed to make no difference what form of birth control was used, be it pill, diaphragm, condoms or other methods.

"It doesn't make any sense," Dan said. "I can't think of any biological explanation for this."

DAN ADDED, HOWEVER, THAT victims surveyed by the CDC had remarkably inactive sex lives, having intercourse one time or less per week, and only about 30 percent of victims surveyed in either study used any form of birth control.

Dan speculated that sexual activity, not birth control, might somehow protect women from toxic shock.

Toxic shock is caused by a bacterium called staphylococcus aureus, and Dan said the only women at risk are the small number who carry staph aureus in their vaginas. Doctors are trying to develop a test that will identify these women.

Some theories about toxic shock hold that super-absorbent tampons contain materials that may stimulate development of staph and fit so tightly that they ulcerate the vagina, providing a route for bacteria to reach the bloodstream.

THE CDC STUDY INDICATED that women cannot protect themselves from toxic shock by switching from super-absorbent to regular tampons. The report said there was no significant difference between victims and healthy women "in brand of tampon used, absorbency of tampon used, use of deodorized tampons or use of brands containing high-absorbency materials."

The CDC study, however, was conducted last spring, before data implicating Rely tampons was gathered and released.

Whether or not super-absorbent tampons are more likely to cause toxic shock is being studied in another review under way by health officials in Wisconsin, Minnesota and Iowa.

In an accompanying Journal editorial, Dr. Lowell Glasgow of the University of Utah Medical Center wrote, "The introduction of more highly absorbent tampons may be one factor, but it is clearly not the whole explanation."

INSTEAD, HE SAID, THE disease may be caused by a new strain of the staph bacteria.

"The staphylococci associated with TSS may be one or more strains that have acquired increased virulence or increased capacity to colonize, particularly in the female genital tract during menstruation," he wrote. "The use of tampons and especially highly absorbent tampons may facilitate the overgrowth of this putative TSS-associated strain."

'Undue influence'

Farmer regains land from church

WAUSAU, Wis. (AP) — A Barron County farmer, "blinded by programming" of a California church, has won appellate court approval of his attempt to recover a farm he gave to the organization.

The church insisted its First Amendment rights were being violated, but the 3rd District Court of Appeals said a church, like "every other person and corporation, is obliged to obey the laws relating to undue influence."

Geoge D. McElroy, 67, said he gave his $14,000 farm in 1969 to Ambassador College of the Worldwide Church of God and the World Tomorrow.

The church, founded in Pasadena by Herbert W. Armstrong who broadcast sermons over the Radio Church of God, was involved recently in a dispute with California over church officials' spending.

McElroy, after what was called a disagreement with the church, won a Circuit Court case for return of the farm, plus more than $7,000 in other contributions. The church appealed.

"McElroy's testimony was sufficient to allow a reasonable jury to find by clear, satisfactory and convincing evidence that the deed was the product of undue influence by the church," the three-man appellate court said.

The court was told that McElroy, troubled by a divorce, "was looking for meaning in life" when he heard the church's broadcasts and began reading its literature.

He said he was persuaded to reduce his herd of dairy cows more than 50 percent, was convinced the world would end in 1972, and donated his farm through a deed prepared by the church.

The case's documents include a letter from a church attorney which begins: "Greetings once again from the legal office of God's work."

Women sit on teen suspect

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Some days it just doesn't pay to open a window.

Police say a teen-ager learned that the hard way. He found himself tied up with a telephone cord, with four women sitting on him.

Not surprisingly, he screamed loudly. A neighbor heard the screams and called police.

OFFICER LEROY LINDO SAYS Stephanie Arms, 28, who lives in the house, told him she heard a noise in her closet and fled downstairs, shouting a warning.

The man ran right behind her, apparently bent on getting out of the house. But, police said, he decided he wouldn't be able to get out the front door and ran back upstairs to the window he opened to get in.

BUT MS. ARMS, TWO HOUSEMATES and a friend seized the struggling youth and tied him up with the telephone cord.

Lindo said he found the women sitting on top of the young man, who looked rather sheepish, he said.

Booked for investigation of burglary was Russell James, 18, of Daly City, Lindo said.

Hurt cops can't sue quarries

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The state Supreme Court says a policeman hurt while chasing a reckless driver can't recover damages from the scofflaw.

The 5-2 decision said recovery is barred by the "fireman's rule," which prohibits certain claims by firemen and policemen injured in the course of their hazardous occupations.

The case was brought by Johnny Dean Hubbard, who was on duty in San Diego where he is a policeman, on Feb. 28, 1977. He started chasing a car driven by Robert J. Boelt, and during the chase, Boelt collided with another car. Hubbard was injured when he drove his car onto an embankment in an effort to avoid the two crashed cars.

'Insecure multimillionaire'

Disabled man pours wealth into fancy cars

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Joe Dan Dwyer has two Rolls-Royces, a Ferrari, a Porsche, a sporty Datsun, and a vintage Duesenberg. And a Ford for his dog.

He's shelled out more than $700,000 for those cars. And the former logger, whose fortune stems from the 1974 on-the-job accident that disabled him, says he can't spent his money fast enough.

"I don't want my money to gather dust in a bank somewhere," Dwyer said from a hospital bed in Hialeah, Fla., where he is undergoing his 66th operation. "I'm trying to spend it and enjoy myself.

"Besides, with the kind of money I've got, it's coming in faster than I can spend it — money markets and second mortgage investments, stuff like that."

Dwyer, 49, former Army helicopter pilot and reformed alcoholic, won a multimillion-dollar federal court settlement 16 months ago.

He was run over by a front end loader several times while helping roll up chain used in a hoisting operation. His pelvis was crushed, his right side pushed downward about an inch, and just about every bone in both legs was broken, forcing dozens of operations.

Dwyer, of Reed Spring, Mo., won't say exactly how much he won in the suit against four companies.

"Just say I'm an insecure multimillionaire," he said.

Dwyer's wife, Marcie, picked up the couple's $500,000 SJ Supercharged 1933 Duesenberg this week at the Charles Schmitt dealership here.

Dwyer had bought a 1979 Silver Wraith II Rolls-Royce for $96,000 in San Jose shortly after getting the settlement.

He then bought a 12-cylinder 1972 Model 365 GTC4 Ferrari for $50,000; a white 1958 Rolls-Royce Silver Cloud I for $36,000; and a 1979 Datsun 280ZX for $10,000.

Later, Dwyer purchased a 1979 Porsche 924 at a Springfield, Mo., dealership for $17,500.

Dwyer said a Ford Pinto station wagon his wife bought before they were married is their "dog car." The couple use it to transport their Doberman pinscher.

Just the right price on terrific gift ideas!

Betty Ford eyes second facelift

NEW YORK (AP) — Betty Ford says she is considering having a second facelift operation, according to an interview in the Ladies' Home Journal.

In the January issue of the magazine, the former first lady says the cosmetic surgeon who did her original facelift two years ago told her it would last five years and that a second operation was usually even more successful than the first.

"I don't think I'll wait 'til the five years are up before I have another," Mrs. Ford, 62, is quoted as saying. "I want to be sure I live long enough to enjoy the next one."

Cancer-stricken policeman rehired

BAY HARBOR ISLANDS, Fla. (AP) — The Bay Harbor Islands Town Council dug into its rainy day fund to rehire a 57-year-old police officer who was relieved of his beat because he has liver cancer.

James Moran's voice broke when he learned he had been given a $20,400-a-year job as civilian code enforcement officer for Bay Harbor Islands.

The Town Council voted unanimously to create the job for the former officer. Moran's salary will be paid from the town's $50,000 contingency fund.

"I think they did good by me, as best they could without putting me back on the police force," Moran said.

"He's going to give me a desk in City Hall," he said, proudly referring to his new boss, Town Manager Anthony Nales.

A sergeant with 6½ years on the Bay Harbor Islands force, Moran was relieved of his duties two weeks ago. Police Chief Eugene Griffiths said Moran was incapable of serving on active duty.

Cancer has taken more than 60 pounds from Moran's 5-foot-9 frame the past year and he suffers from the effects of chemotherapy.

Losing his job was the last straw. He picked at his food, said his wife, Loretta. He couldn't sleep.

"It's been a nightmare," she said. "I hoped I would wake up and find it gone . . . It's bad enough what he has without this," she said.

After the story of his plight was reported, Moran started receiving checks and sympathetic phone calls from around the country.

Then he was offered the job. The $20,400 wage is the same salary Moran received as a sergeant and he is also entitled to town employee benefits.

The job is related to police work. It will be Moran's duty to enforce the building and zoning codes, but he won't wear a uniform and won't carry a gun.

Happy faces show students' enjoyment at a song fest, culminating a language skills program at Woodland School in Costa Mesa. Benefiting from the 10-week course are kindergarten through third grade pupils who crowd the multipurpose room for the musical finale. Leading group singing is Dan Crow, speech communication specialist, who entertains with guitar and is given a helping hand by Ladd McGregor when kazoo gets stuck. Crow took his specially designed program of songs to classrooms where he helped students develop skills in oral language and phonics.

Buying the right watch is no split-second decision.

Many people just rush right out and buy a new watch for themselves or as a gift. We often wonder why.

When you think about it, your new watch is a pretty important purchase that ought to be around for awhile. Mostly around your wrist, or the wrist of someone special.

So stop for a minute and consider some of the decisions you should make to find just the right watch.

Putting the right name with the face.

Obviously there are lots of watches on the market, and the better your selection, the better your chances of buying the right one.

Men's Concord Mariner Quartz, $1390. Ladies' Concord Diamond Quartz, $2650.

Frankly, we think we offer the best selection you'll find anywhere around town.

These lines make up our selection of over 500 ladies' and men's watches: Seiko, Concord, Corum, Piaget, Pulsar, Baume & Mercier, Longines, Wittnauer and Colibri.

Nine major watch companies with names you've heard. And the brand name you choose is almost as important as the face of the watch you choose.

As for style, you might choose a handsome ultra-thin dress watch like the Concord Collection Delirium III, that's only 1.69 millimeters thick. Or perhaps the incredibly sophisticated Seiko Personal Time Control Center.

Dress watches may be simple and sleek. Or they may be pieces of magnificent jewelry. Of course there are also specialty sport watches like the Seiko Calculator Alarm, or Pulsar's jogger watch.

Seiko's Time Control Center, $215. Lady Seiko, $115.

Or coin watches like the .999 pure gold Corum Swiss Ingot, just to name a few.

All watches tell time. Some do it with their hands, and others have digital displays.

And to keep your new watch in place, you may choose a band of lizard, leather, a gold bracelet, or perhaps a chain for a pocket watch.

We know you'll be very pleased with the selection of all names, styles, and faces you'll find at Jewels by Joseph.

Quartz watches are accurate to 60 seconds a year.

Accuracy has always been a standard for judging a fine watch. And it still is. Until recent electronic technology introduced quartz watches, virtually every watch was powered by mechanics (Main Springs and Balance Wheels). And although some mechanical watches are still available with traditional craftsmanship, most new watches feature quartz electric power.

For the runner, Pulsar Jogger's Watch, $49.50. Slender and elegant, Ladies' Pulsar Dress Quartz, $125.

Most new quartz watches are accurate to within 60 seconds per year, and require a simple battery change usually once a year.

Finding the right price.

Naturally, you'll be the one to decide just how much to spend on your new watch. But we'll make sure you have a fine selection of prices.

Watches vary with the specific name and style. Our watches start at less than $50 for a Pulsar, and go up to over $13,900 for the Piaget Polo. And we offer many others at nearly any price in-between.

One thing's for sure. Whatever you spend, you'll be buying quality, made by a watch company that knows their craft, and one that's backed by our own reputation.

Why look anywhere else?

We think the selection you'll find at Jewels by Joseph will help make your decision easier. And save you hours of running from place to place.

And that gives you more time to enjoy your new watch.

OCTD buses look good

No defects seen in preliminary checks

A team of mechanics from the Grumman Corp. inspected 18 of the Orange County Transit District's new buses but found no cracks.

Bob Mitchell, maintenance supervisor for OCTD, said the mechanics will continue to examine the buses until all 65 have been checked.

The inspections were ordered after cracks in rear suspension systems were found in its new model Flxible buses by transit officials in a number of communities across the nation.

NO STRUCTURAL DEFECTS have been discovered in the OCTD's batch of buses that began running last summer. Mitchell said Orange County's buses were some of the first produced by the manufacturer before changes occurred in welding procedures which are being blamed for the defects.

"Our buses were the earlier models," said Mitchell. "RTD's came later."

The Southern California Rapid Transit District pulled all 230 of its new Grumman buses off the streets Monday after cracks were found in 121 of them.

MITCHELL SAID OCTD mechanics have visually inspected the new buses for cracks and that another spot check was made later using a black light technique.

The Grumman mechanics are using that same technique, in which a dye and then a fluorescent chemical is sprayed on surfaces and black light is projected to search for cracks.

The inspections are taking place as the buses return to the Garden Grove maintenance yard in the evening, Mitchell added.

Trade standard blamed

'Buy-American' rule root of problem

NEW YORK (AP) — A "Buy American" rule intended to give U.S. bus makers an advantage over foreign companies is a key reason why so many cities have new Grumman Flxible buses — hundreds of which have been garaged for inspection and repairs.

Grumman faced competition for city bus sales only from General Motors.

Foreign manufacturers were virtually eliminated by the 2-year-old "Buy-American" rule, and many companies — foreign and domestic — bowed out because of the federal government's stringent specifications for buses bought with federal money.

THE VEHICLES HAD TO BE light to save fuel, have air conditioning to attract summer riders and have special controls for safety. They also had to meet air pollution regulations.

Some analysts have suggested that the conflicting demands of the various features contributed to the problems with the boxy Flxibles.

NEWS ANALYSIS

Officials in New York grounded all 637 of the city's Flxibles after one bus collapsed in service last week and it was found others had developed cracks in their frames. Los Angeles idled all 230 of its Flxibles and Chicago's 215-bus Flxible fleet was inspected.

Problems were reported in several other cities.

GM buses have been criticized for air-conditioning problems and poor brake linings. The company says the problems are being fixed.

GRUMMAN HAS SAID THAT OF the 23 cities operating Flxible buses, eight complained of cracks. The company said it would not comment on design or construction problems because the matter was in the hands of lawyers.

An eight-member team from the U.S. Urban Mass Transportation Administration flew to New York on Tuesday to try to find out what was going wrong with the buses.

A spokesman for the UMTA said that under the federal Surface Transportation Act of 1978, if an American bus were offered to a city for $100,000, and a foreign-made bus was offered at $90,000 the federal government would subsidize the American bid by up to 10 percent.

Even if the foreign bus maker were still the low bidder, it would have to comply with scores of federal regulations. Only then would the government grant a city buying a foreign bus the 80 percent of the purchase price it gives cities buying conforming buses.

IN NEW YORK, AUTHUR PERFALL, a spokesman for the Metropolitan Transportation Authority, said the agency contacted European manufacturers in 1978 when it knew it was going to order buses.

"When we put out for bids, only General Motors and Grumman made them, primarily because the foreign manufacturers couldn't comply with federal specifications," Perfall said.

In Los Angeles, the race was over before it began for foreign bus makers because the LA Rapid Transit District board "has made it a policy to buy American," said spokeswoman Kathy McCoy.

She said Grumman came in the low bidder two years ago. GM has since lowered its bids and new buses from that company are starting to arrive she said.

IN SANTA MONICA, BIDS weren't even sought from foreign manufacturers, and Grumman Flxible bid lower than rival GM. There are problems with 10 of the city's 47 Grummans.

"No foreign manufacturer that I'm aware of could meet the specifications," said Jack Hutchinson, director of transportation for the Santa Monica bus line.

In Houston, buying foreign buses was never seriously considered, according to Metropolitan Transit Authority spokeswoman Janet Redeker. She said the authority, only about a year old and needing new buses quickly, decided it was more expedient to buy American. It purchased 326 Grumman Flxibles — all currently in service — and 150 from GM.

Credit rejected for Carter limo

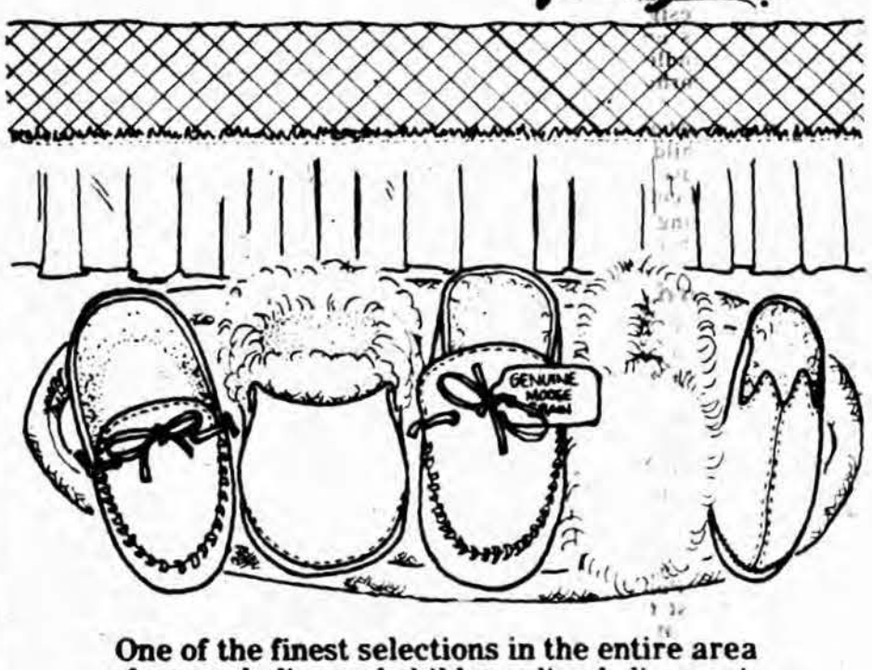

BEAVER FALLS, Pa. (AP) — Back in October, Joe and Laddie Knapp were thrilled when Secret Service agents drove President Carter's sleek limousine into their service station for a fillup.

Laddie Knapp was so excited he ran across the street and had a photographer take a picture of him with the car, which was being serviced while Carter was off campaigning.

Now the Knapps have received notice from Atlantic Richfield Co. that it not accept the $5.10 credit charge for the 3.8 gallons punmped into the bulletproof Lincoln Continental. An Arco spokesman told the Beaver County Times the company does not accept certain federal credit cards.

Safety's first rule

DEAR READERS: Heaps of brightly wrapped toys are part of most children's Christmas, and unwrapping and playing with them is a highlight of holiday fun. In some households, however, merriment can soon be dimmed if the toys are dangerous.

When you do your Christmas shopping, buy protectively. Remember children often don't recognize the potential hazard in toys, so they should be shopped for with safety in mind.

Here are some tips to help insure a happy and safe Christmas:

— Toys for babies should be too large to fit into the mouth, easily washable, light in weight and nonbreakable.

— Tiny children are often tempted not only to swallow toys but to shove them into their noses or ears. Keep such items as beads and marbles out of their hands. The eyes of dolls and stuffed animals should be safely secured so they can't be pulled out and swallowed or put into the nose or ears.

— Children of all ages should be protected from toys with rough or sharp edges or those that may break into sharp pieces.

— Avoid toys or costumes that can catch fire easily.

— Don't buy toys made of lead or colored with lead-based paint.

— It is safe to give electrical toys and equipment to school-age children if they have been approved by the Underwriter's Laboratory. Look for the UL seal on the cord and the toy.

— Any type of shooting toy or sharp pointed toy carries with it the danger of inflicting eye injury.

The perennial Christmas favorite, the bicycle, has become increasingly hazardous as it becomes more complex in design. Do not give a multiple speed bike to youngsters unless they have the skill and coordination to handle it. And don't give any kind of bike if your neighborhood does not provide safe areas for bicycling.

A chemistry set makes a marvelous gift for a science-oriented child, but give it only if the child understands how to use it. Supervise its use until you are convinced your child will handle it wisely.

Toys should bring Christmas fun into your home, so buy only those you know are safe.

Santa Legends traced

DEAR PAT: My son is just old enough to be interested in Santa Claus. He's asked me where Santa's sled and reindeer came from and why he comes down the chimney to deliver gifts. Everyone knows the sled and reindeer came from the North Pole, but I'm stumped for an answer about why he comes down the chimney. Can you find out? I'm sure a lot of other youngsters would be interested too.

H.W., Newport Beach

Santa's sleigh and reindeer must have come from the North Pole since that's where Santa lives. But, the first time anyone learned about it was in Clement C. Moore's famous poem, "A Visit From St. Nicholas."

The belief that Santa enters the home via the chimney comes from an old Norse legend. The Norse believed that the goddess Hertha would bring good luck to a home if she appeared in the fireplace. It's only natural that Santa would choose this method of entering houses to bring lucky (and good) children their Christmas gifts.

Caffeine study inconclusive

DEAR PAT: I am expecting my first child and was concerned when I read your recent column item about the Food and Drug Administration issuing a warning about the possibility of caffeine causing birth defects. In the FDA tests, exactly what defects were observed in the test animals and how much caffeine was given to them?

K.W., Fountain Valley

In the study, caffeine caused missing toes or missing parts of toes, and some animals whose mothers received caffeine did not grow as fast as those whose mothers were not exposed to it. The delayed growth, which might be reversible, was found at levels of caffeine consumption comparable to just two cups of coffee a day for humans.

The study did not provide conclusive evidence that caffeine has ever caused a birth defect in a human being. The scientists who conducted the rat study noted that their work "lacked the quality to assure either the safety or the lack of safety of caffeine" and urge further studies. In addition, some new research indicates that people do not respond to caffeine the same way rats or other experimental animals do.

'Killer' ad defended

Chevy agency views imports as unsafe

NEW YORK (AP) — An officer of the agency behind an advertisement that implies foreign cars are dangerous says he is "happy to be sleazy" if that's what it takes to get the message across.

Samuel I. Ratner, vice president of Berger, Stone and Ratner, defended an advertisement for the Chevrolet Chevette that a spokesman for the Association of National Advertisers says is "disgusting" and "gives the advertising business a bad name."

The ad, which appeared in some magazines in the Northeast and was paid for by regional Chevrolet dealers, depicts ambulance attendants loading a body into their vehicle. A demolished foreign car is nearby.

"BUT IT GOT 43 MPG!" THE copy reads, adding, "In what are your children driving tonight? Is it a car which passed the latest U.S. safety tests?"

The ad goes on to say that although Chevette passed the tests, several major import models did not.

An official of Nissan Motor Corp. in USA, importer of Datsun, called the ad "a cheap shot and a travesty in advertising."

A spokesman for General Motors Corp., corporate parent of Chevrolet, said "we're not terribly proud" of the campaign, adding dealers are independent and control their advertising.

Anthony Lunt of the New York-based Association of National Advertisers said the ad is based on somewhat controversial statistics and tests.

THE TESTS CITED WERE DONE by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, which crashes cars at 35 mph and examines dummies inside to determine whether human counterparts would have survived.

Lunt said 35 mph is five mph faster than the rate at which the federal government stages collisions to determine if a car clears mandatory safety standards. All cars must meet the 30 mph standard to be sold in the United States.

The auto industry magazine Automotive News editorialized: "Would you like to see a picture of a mangled Chevrolet Caprice in a foreign maker's ad? People die in Chevrolets that don't get 43 mpg."

ROBERT B. KENT, A VICE president at Nissan's American subsidiary, told the Wall Street Journal: "Had we chosen to, we could have picked on the Pinto fires and the Omni and Horizon recall problems, but playing on people's fears isn't our style."

But Joseph Stone, president of Berger, Stone, said "I don't think it's stupid to tell the American public it has a life edge by driving a Chevette."

Bad image has 'em seething

They're proud to be Buffalonians

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — After years of putting up with put downs about their city, Buffalonians are responding with a vengeance to a Chamber of Commerce battle cry called Talking Proud.

Launched three months ago, the media campaign has bombarded area residents with positive facts about Buffalo and has created an underground hit tune as well.

Its lyrics aren't the snappiest. The good life that we share/ With nice people who care/ It's time to tell 'em all. We're up and standing tall.

But never mind. The song has caught on. When played during recent National Football League games, Buffalo Bills fans sang the words and danced in the aisles. Others scheduled regular sing-alongs in a local bar.

And a local manufacturer says sales of "Talking Proud" T-shirts have soared. Steve Batts said his company expected to make about 200 dozen shirts, but has already received orders for nearly 1,000 dozen.

But many problems remain.

Heavily dependent on such troubled industries as automobiles and steel, Buffalo's 9.3 percent unemployment rate is the state's highest.

With its numerous dingy buildings and empty storefronts, the downtown area remains a depressing shock to the first-time visitor.

Once a thriving hub of milling and transportation, Buffalo was hurt severely by the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway in 1957. Virtually overnight, the scores of ships that once dropped off Midwest grain for milling in the "Queen City of the Lakes" and shipment by rail just continued on to the Atlantic.

Buffalo's economic base declined, and with it, the tax base. Between 1950 and 1970, 117,000 people moved away, leaving about 463,000 — a figure that dropped to 357,000 by 1980, according to preliminary estimates.

Many of the buildings that make Buffalo an architectural treasure trove — works by Frank Lloyd Wright and Louis Sullivan, for example — were torn down or sank into decay. By the 1960s, a San Francisco sportswriter had dubbed it "the armpit of the East."

Such talk was bad enough by itself. But after the infamous Blizzard of '77 — when the season's snowfall totaled 199.8 inches — Buffalo's image as the place beyond the end of the world was firmly etched into the national consciousness.

"Buffalo jokes" by such luminaries as Johnny Carson and even Howard Cosell were not always appreciated here. When Cosell referred to the city as a "clone of Cleveland" on a national broadcast, even Mayor James Griffin fired off an angry letter.

And the bad image got a boost from the popular Broadway musical "A Chorus Line," which got laughs from the audience with the one-liner: "Suicide in Buffalo would be redundant."

The resentment comes through in one rather heavy-handed radio ad.

"Listen up America," growls a pugnacious voice. "This is Buffalo talking. We're tired of your insults about us. Tired of the weather jokes. We like it here, America . . . We've got great food, night spots, plays, musicals, operas and great weather.

"In short, America, we Buffalonians have got a lot going for us. And we're not going to take your abuse any longer.

"So back off, America," the voice warns. "We've got pride . . . Do you hear us, America? Do you hear us?"

Masked woman finds police unimpressed

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Calling it "an extremely unusual case," a city judge has ruled it is not against the law to wear a mask of President-elect Reagan in public.

Judge T.M. Smallwood said that an ordinance designed to prevent masked Ku Klux Klan rallies did not apply in the case of Peggy Dobbins, an assistant sociology professor at the University of Alabama.

THE 42-YEAR-OLD woman was arrested Nov. 1 en route to a city park where, she said, she intended to perform "a political skit." She wore a Reagan mask over white face makeup and painted mustache to make her look like Adolf Hitler.

"If the city loses this case, it will be just another loss," defense attorney Martha Jane Patton told the judge. "But if Mrs. Dobbins loses, how can she and her husband explain to their children how they can go trick-or-treating on Halloween night?"

The judge delayed until Jan. 20 a verdict on charges Mrs. Dobbins assaulted the arresting officer and was disorderly.

SMALLWOOD SAID Mrs. Dobbins' case fell under the exceptions to the law that allow a person to wear a mask "if he is going to or from a masquerade party or is participating in a public parade or presentation of an educational, religious or historical character."

Mrs. Dobbins said she hoped the judge's verdict means that people "wouldn't be afraid to express their politics artistically."

OSU chief quits

Teacher sues six students

MOUNT CLEMENS, Mich. (AP) — A high school teacher is suing six female students she says have driven cars over her lawn and bombarded her home with eggs and bottles.

Sybil Ann Lucken, an instructor who teaches business courses at Tower High School, filed the $150,000 lawsuit in Macomb County Circuit Court against the girls and their parents. Mrs. Jucken described the girls, all 17 or 18 years old, as "very bright students . . . from good homes."

She says she does not know why she has been harassed because the students allegedly involved are not in her classes.

Woman's purse swiped by dog

CHICAGO (AP) — A black Doberman pinscher wearing a spiked collar is being sought by Chicago police after it pinched a purse with $270 inside.

The victim of the mugging was Janice Niecikowski, 24, the wife of a Chicago police officer, authorities said. Police said she had opened the door of her car when the snarling Doberman leaped and clamped its jaws on her left arm.

"She was scared to death," said her husband, patrolman Thomas Niecikowski.

As his wife tried to get away, he said, the dog pulled harder, finally releasing her arm only to clamp onto her purse.

The dog fled down a street with the purse firmly in its jaws. Niecikowski said the couple reported the crime with some hesitation for fear no one would believe it.

"What do we do for a line-up if we find a suspect?" asked one detective. "Do we have to have all Dobermans? Can't we throw in some cocker spaniels?"

Judge demotes self

VISTA (AP) — A state appeals court judge is stepping down from the state's second highest court and taking a seat in the "trenches" by assigning himself as a Superior Court trial judge.

Justice Howard Wiener began a two-month assignment in Vista and San Diego courtrooms saying he was looking at the time as a source of "regeneration and re-education."

A state court official said Wiener is one of the first active appellate court judges to serve in a court lower than that to which he is normally assigned.

Ruling upheld

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A ruling requiring class size reductions in many San Francisco public schools has been upheld by a Superior Court judge. Judge Ira Brown ruled in favor of the San Francisco Federation of Teachers, upholding an arbitrator's ruling which said the teachers' contract sets limits on class sizes.

Woman has a bangup time on car rampage

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — A woman reportedly upset by an argument with her boyfriend staged a "demolition derby" near downtown Tulsa, ramming her car into 18 vehicles, five street signs and two fences, causing damage estimated at $20,000, police said.

"I have never seen anything like this in my entire life as a traffic officer," John Storms said Wednesday. I checked the records and there has never been this many points of impact from one single incident."

Storms said Mary Glynn Boudreaux, 37, was finally stopped by police after the rampage and arrested near 12th Street and South Boston Avenue, a short distance from the center of the business district.

Storms said she had a quarrel with her boyfriend earlier.

"She first jumped a median and took out a street sign there," Storms said.

Then, he said, she almost hit a woman who was getting out of a parked car.

"SHE BASHED THE woman's car and went across Boulder and ran into a wrought iron fence belonging to the First Methodist Church. She then took out a chain link fence where the church has some new construction."

Storms said the woman snapped off traffic signs at an intersection and headed for the church parking lot.

"This is where she really started the demolition derby," Storms said. "Most of the cars there belonged to church staff members. She just went to it. Bam, bam, bam."

SOME OF THE cars were hit with both the front and rear of her car, he said.

"She left the lot and went east on 10th Street . . . Here she saw one of those postal Jeeps waiting for a light. She went for it, ramming it in the side."

After that, he said, she drove south on Boston Avenue, a one-way major street, the wrong way and rammed about three parked cars.

Information on the incident has been turned over to the Tulsa County district attorney's office for action. No charges have been filed.

Cancer course offered

"I Can Cope," an education and support program for cancer patients, will be offered at UCI Medical Center beginning Jan. 22.

The program, co-sponsored by the medical center and the Orange County unit of the American Cancer Society, will continue for nine consecutive Thursdays from 7 to 9 p.m. in the hospital cafeteria Green Room. There is no charge for participation.

The program is being presented for the first time in Orange County. Patients will be provided with information on the medical, physical, social and psychological aspects of cancer and how to cope with it as a chronic disease.

Topics to be discussed include nutrition, physical fitness, communicating with others, sexuality, dealing with stress and tension and the availability of community resources. Classes will be taught by members of the medical center's medical, nursing and social services staffs.

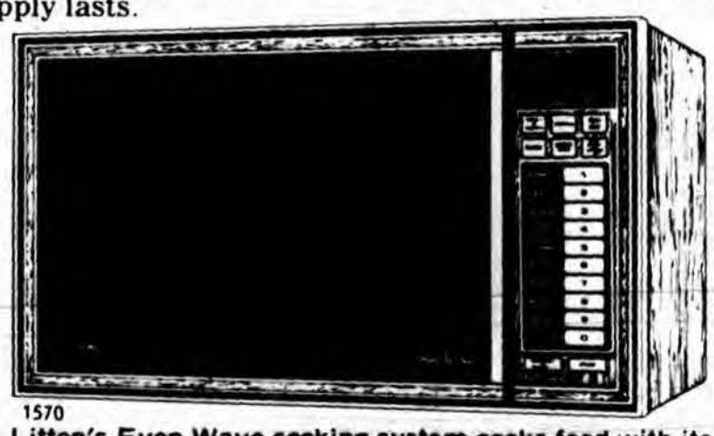

Additional information about the program and registration can be obtained by calling Ed Houser, 634-5483, or the Division of Medical Oncology, 634-5895. The deadline for registration is Dec. 31.

Sentence slated in death

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A Los Angeles woman has pleaded no contest to vehicular manslaughter in the death of Robert Linkletter, the 35-year-old son of entertainer Art Linkletter.

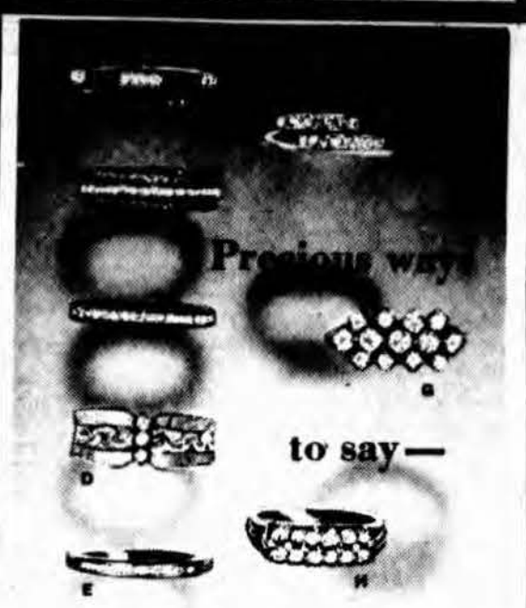

Gracie Jones, 24, entered her plea before Municipal Judge Sherman W. Smith Jr. Sentencing was set Jan. 16.

On Sept. 12 Ms. Jones' car crossed the center line of Santa Monica Boulevard in West Los Angeles and slammed head-on into Linkletter's car. Linkletter suffered fatal chest injuries and a passenger was hospitalized with face and rib injuries.

It was the third family tragedy for Art Linkletter, the jovial host of such radio and television programs as "House Party" and "People are Funny."

In 1969 his 20-year-old daughter Diane leaped to her death from a window of her West Hollywood apartment while under the influence of the drug LSD. Three months earlier, John Andrew Zweyer, 33-year-old husband of Linkletter's oldest daughter, Dawn, shot himself to death in his Hollywood apartment.

Illinois adopts deer as 'state animal'

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — It took awhile for the votes to be counted, but state authorities say the white-tailed deer has been elected the state's official animal by Illinois schoolchildren.

Children cast ballots on the issue in November, choosing among six candidates. The white-tailed deer, which sprang to an early lead in balloting, finished with 37 percent of the 694,658 votes.

The results were disclosed by the state boards of elections and education this week.

THE LOSING ANIMALS, in order of their finish, were: the raccoon, with 26.6 percent; the red fox, with 19 percent; the fox squirrel, with 8.7 percent; the ground squirrel, with 3.7 percent, and the opossum, with 3.6 percent.

Eight thousand write-in votes were cast. Critters earning write-in votes were the badger, rabbit, bobcat, dog, ram, mountain lion, cat, rat, skunk, beaver, goat, donkey and horse.

The results will be sent to the state General Assembly, and lawmakers are expected next spring to formally approve the deer as the state's official animal.

ILLINOIS ALREADY has a state tree, flower and bird — all chosen through balloting by school children. The state also has an official insect and mineral, but they were adopted by the Legislature without consultation with the youngsters.

Charges of unfair influence surfaced during the balloting when Bill Stanton, 48, of suburban Chicago, complained his candidate, the skunk, was skunked.

"I'm not surprised by the deer," Stanton said in November when the deer leaped to an early lead. "This time of year the little kids are thinking about Santa's reindeer and this has influenced the vote. I think it's unfair."

There were two ballots in the animal election — one with pictures of each candidate for the younger school children and a written ballot for older students. Officials said high school students took little interest, though they were eligible to vote.

DISGUSTED GOBBLER

EAST GRANBY, Conn. (AP) — A 15-pound wild turkey, in what appeared to be a kamikaze-like attempt to avenge the deaths of its kindred fowl, smashed through the windshield of a truck loaded with frozen chickens, state police reported.

The truck's driver was wearing glasses and was uninjured in the incident, but "the bird was deceased," police said.

Shooting ban wins

INDIO, (AP) — Despite a Federal Aviation Administration warning that dogs on Palm Springs airport runways are a hazard, a judge has refused to lift his ban on shooting the animals.

Riverside County Superior Court Judge John Carroll said Wednesday there was insufficient evidence that the FAA would close the airport and refused to lift his temporary restraining order forbidding city employees from shooting the dogs.

BUT CARROLL, who based his ruling on correspondence submitted by the city of Palm Springs, did say he would try to reschedule a Jan. 8 hearing for an earlier date.

FAA District Director Robert Bloom had warned in a letter to Palm Springs City Transportation Director Ed Colby that the presence of stray dogs at the airport "is a violation" of FAA regulations "and may lead to the finding that the city is in noncompliance."

Animal control officers had tried trapping the animals, but without success.

BECAUSE OF the problem, the Airport Commission voted unanimously Dec. 4 to shoot stray dogs if they could not be rounded up.

Concerned Citizens Against Violence, a local pro-animal group, opposed the shooting plan and received the temporary restraining order.

Staubach still has desire to play

But ex-Cowboy QB says he quit at right time

By King Features

The pangs return, or maybe it's that they never really left. He does feel a desire to play again. He suspects he always will.

Roger Staubach, the retired Dallas Cowboys quarterback, is honest enough with himself to admit it.

But the yearning to suit up again, to win one more unwinnable game, afflicts Staubach less and less as his withdrawal from the National Football League nears completion of its first full cycle. He feels the adrenalin pumping only on Sunday afternoon or Monday night or Thanksgiving Day — whenever the schedule says this is game day for the Cowboys.

"I GET THOSE feelings strictly on game days," he says. "Being part of the emotion you have after winning a game is what I miss. That was always an exciting time.

"That excitement isn't there. Nor is the satisfaction you get from competing and winning. Then being able to share that with teammates and your family.

Winning was what Staubach liked most and did best. Largely with him at the controls, Dallas won more regular season games during the 1970's than any other NFL team.

Staubach claimed four league passing championships; in fact, he left the game after nailing No. 4 in 1979. Of the record five Super Bowl appearances the Cowboys made, four were behind Staubach , who quarterbacked the club's two world title victories.

YET THE HALLMARK statistics of this 22-year career may be the number of games he captured while fighting the clock and the defenses stacked against his passes. He brought Dallas from behind 23 times in the fourth quarter, 14 times in the final two minutes.

So why did he announce retirement last March at the peak of his physical and mental powers?

In the next-to-last game of his career, Staubach worked his most fabulous rally. Actually two in the same game. The Cowboys were down to Washington early, 17-0. And late in a contest to decide the NFC East champion they were trailing, 34-21, with four minutes left. At the finish, Staubach had Dallas' a nose in front, 35-34.

If a Staubach bows from the sport after winning a passing title plus four games in the last two minutes of ONE season, should less talented athletes consider the same move?

"No," he says. "I think everyone's decision usually is unique as to why he retired and when."

BUT THERE IS one factor Staubach believes is a danger sign to any athlete, old or young. When the backstage tedium of preparing to play becomes just that — tedium — then it's time to consider getting out.

"When that mundane routing gets to you

Kings let victory get away

INGLEWOOD (AP) — Los Angeles saw a victory slip away Wednesday night when Pittsburgh's George Ferguson scored with just 16 seconds to play. But Coach Bob Berry of the Kings didn't sound at all upset.

"I feel fortunate to get the tie in that we played only one good period, the third," said Berry after the Penguins and Kings wound up in a 3-3 National Hockey League deadlock. "At the end of the second period, a tie looked pretty good to us.

"We had talked about coming out strong after being on the road for four games but we just couldn't get it going. Jim Fox and Dean Hopkins really gave us a lift coming off the bench in the third period, especially since they haven't played much."

THE KINGS, who were 2-1-1 on their road trip, trailed 2-0 entering the final period, but Fox, a rookie who had scored only two goals thus far this season, doubled that output and was credited with an assist on Los Angeles' third goal.

After a scoreless first period, the Penguins went ahead on goals by Ross Lonsberry and Peter Lee early in the second period. It was the eighth goal of the campaign for each.

Glen Goldup got the Kings on the scoreboard at 26 seconds of the third period and Fox, a 20-year-old right winger, tied the score at 10:52 of the final period.

FOX PUT the Kings ahead with 4:56 left on a power-play goal. It looked like the advantage would stand up, but the Penguins had a two-man advantage down the stretch because Los Angeles defenseman Dave Lewis drew a roughing penalty with 53 seconds to go and Pittsburgh pulled goalie Greg Millen.

Ferguson beat Los Angeles goalie Mario Lessard as time wound down to give his team the tie.

"It's good to get a point on the road," said Pittsburgh Coach Eddie Johnston. "We played a good game. The Kings have one of the best records in hockey.

"When you're away for four or five games, as the Kings were, it's tough in your first game at home. I thought we deserved two points, we shut down the line we had to shut down. We deserved two but we'll take one."

JOHNSTON REFERRED to the Kings' high-scoring line of Marcel Dionne, Charlie Simmer and Dave Taylor, which was held without a point, something that seldom happens.

LB Poly succumbs

San Marcos next for Ocean View

By ROGER CARLSON
Of the Daily Pilot Staff

WALNUT — If there are any skeptics left regarding the prowess of Ocean View High's basketball team — they are definitely among a vanishing breed.

The Seahawks passed the ultimate test Wednesday night in the second round of the San Dimas Tournament of Champions with an amazing flourish, smashing talented, poised and previously undefeated Long Beach Poly, the CIF Southern Section's No. 1 rated team, 67-55.

The victory sends Coach Jim Harris' Ocean View quintet into Friday night's championship semifinals game against San Marcos (8:30) at the same site — Mt. San Antonio College.

WAYNE CARLANDER, Ocean View's 6-8 All-CIF 4-A star from a year ago, put on a dazzling display of power, scoring 34 points, grabbing 21 rebounds and showed a little bit of everything you'd like from a basketball player in the process.

"Everyone was ready to play, there was no doubt about that," said Harris. "Wayne's legs were shaking a little before the game and when he does that you know you're going to get a great game out of him."

Actually, Harris got a great game out of his entire team — 6-9 Jim Usevitch, 6-7 Eric Fuchser and three others — perhaps the most important of all, the guards who fought the challenge of Poly's press and won.

Bill Small and Scott DeBrouwer started in the backcourt and got help from Dave Davis, and each came into his own with key efforts from start to finish.

"THERE WAS AN atmosphere present," said Harris. "We knew we were playing Poly."

Poly Coach Ron Palmer, who acknowledged earlier how every Jackrabbits opponent seems ready for his club, was disgusted with his team.

"Our basic mental approach wasn't right " said Palmer. "I don't know how many easy buckets we missed, but I do know we were not ready for Ocean View tonight."

The Jackrabbits, a quick and fluid club with every asset a coach could want, came up empty-handed in the latter stages as the winners pulled away from a 40-40 tie to win going away.

IN THE FINAL quarter Poly shooters missed 13 of 17 from the field and five of six from the line, while the Seahawks came up with one spectacular effort after another before a roaring crowd of 1,200 to up their record to 7-0.

"We were in the game and still missing," noted Palmer. "Every time we had a run, Ocean View would make a great play or we'd mess it up."

Carlander had 21 points at the half and held up his scoring average, which was at 33.3 going into the contest.

"If you can't say Wayne Carlander is the best player in the country you weren't watching the game," said Harris. "I can't help it, I'm just a Wayne Carlander fan."

USEVITCH ADDED 14 points to the Seahawks' totals, but in the long run, it was the guards' abilities to not only survive Poly's press, but actually winning that battle, that seemed to shake the Jackrabbits' confidence.

The last Poly run was at 55-51 with 4:56 left. Then Carlander scored from six-fee six feet out and Davis followed with a steal and subsequent twisting layup through traffic.

The Seahawks finished the night by connecting on 25 of 55 from the field and 17 of 23 at the line, while Poly shooters could manage only 26 of 58 from the field and a miserable 3 of 14 from the line.

Sanders stars

Bruins top Japan

TOKYO (AP) — Co-captain Mike Sanders poured in 18 points to lead UCLA to an easy 94-55 victory over a Japanese all-star team in a goodwill game before 3,500 spectators today.

The Bruins, outplaying the Japanese in all phases of the game, led 49-25 at halftime.

Also contributing to UCLA's victory were Tony Anderson, Darren Daye and Rod Foster with 12 points each.

Sanders, who dumped in the first two baskets, was voted the most valuable player of the game, held at the site of the 1964 Olympic Games. He also received an award for scoring the most points.

Katsunori Kumagaya scored Japan's first goal after trailing 11-0.

The game was more of a tuneup for the Californians, who are scheduled to meet Temple University in their sixth official game Sunday.

Temple will meet the same Japanese team on Saturday.

RAMS SOLD OUT; ON TV SUNDAY

The Rams announced Wednesday that Sunday's game at Anaheim Stadium with the Atlanta Falcons has been sold out.

It's the sixth consecutive sellout for the Rams who will be trying to gain the home field advantage in the upcoming wild card playoff.

Kickoff for Sunday's game is 1 p.m. It will be televised on Channel 2.

Yachtsmen irked

Professionalism label criticized

By ALMON LOCKABEY
Daily Pilot Boating Writer

Yacht racers have always nourished the term "corinthianism," meaning amateur, meaning that one engages in the sport for love and not monetary gain.

But monetary gain has never been strictly defined except that no skipper or crew should receive fiscal awards for participating in a local, national or international event.

An exception to that rule is that one or more "paid hands" are allowed on boats of certain sizes — usually large boats. These hands have been considered of the maintenance type and were not allowed to engage in sailing the yacht while in a race.

THE EMERGENCE in recent years of designers, builders, sailmakers, spar manufacturers and certain types of gear manufacturers as crewmen have again raised the spectre of professionalism, especially on winning boats. Do such personnel profit in their business or profession?

The answer to these and other questions is a firm "yes" by a Committee on Professionalism recently appointed by the United States Yacht Racing Union.

And the committee's report has generated a storm of protest that may not be weathered for some time to come and could set yachting back a generation or two, according to the protesters.

Loudest screams were heard from the Southern California Yachting Association and certain individuals when the report was heard at the annual meeting of USYRU at Newport, R.I. in November. The gale of protest was so violent that USYRU has tabled the report until its April meeting.

WHO WOULD BE classed as professionals, according to the report?

— Anyone engaged in a business or vocation — oriented toward yacht racing. This was defined as an individual whose business or vocation was related to make a boat go faster, including designers, some builders, sailmakers, spar makers and those who specialize in rigging and equipping racing yachts.

— When such individuals use the expertise and knowledge acquired in his business or vocation to help improve the racing performance of a yacht on which he is a crew member, he is a professional.

— An amateur who allows his

Corny betting loss payoff gives Governor Brown gas

From AP dispatches

SPRINGFIELD, ILL. — Illinois Gov. James R. Thompson isn't trying to welch on a sports bet. It's just that the method of payment he is considering might lead California Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. to think twice the next time the two wager.

The two governors had bet on the outcome of last weekend's NCAA Division II national championship football game between Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo and Eastern Illinois University.

Brown bet 25 pounds of high-energy wood chips produced in California that Cal Poly would win the game. Thompson wagered 10 gallons of gasohol made from Illinois-grown corn that Eastern, the favorite, would win. Cal Poly upset Eastern, 21-13.

Thompson was asked Wednesday how he would ship the 10 gallons of gasohol to California — in glass bottles, plastic jugs or what?

Thompson, a Republican, said he hasn't decided.

But he said he was considering sending Brown, a Democrat, a bushel of Illinois corn to "let him grind his own" ethyl alcohol. One part grain alcohol mixed with nine parts regular gasoline begets gasohol.

"We didn't say how the gasohol would be delivered," Thompson said.

Quote of the day

Lou Holtz, Arkansas football coach, opening his weekly TV show after the Razorbacks' 31-7 loss to SMU, the team's fourth defeat in five games: "Welcome to the Lou Holtz Show. Unfortunately, I'm Lou Holtz."

Morales signs three-year Orioles pact

Free agent Jose Morales, one of baseball's top pinch hitters, has signed a three-year contract with the Baltimore Orioles. Morales, 35, batted .303 during the 1980 season with Minnesota, where he batted more than .300 two of the past three seasons as a designated hitter. Morales led all American League designated hitters in 1978 batting .323 . . . Arizona State pitcher Ron Romanick, who Sun Devils Coach Jim Brock said would have been "one of the top four of five pitchers in the country this season, has been ruled ineligible for the 1981 season by the NCAA, the Tempe Daily News reported. The NCAA decreed that Romanick practiced with the University of Washington baseball team while attending classes at that school last spring . . . something the pitcher says is not true . . . Left-hander Ron Guidry's agent said he came away from a two-hour meeting with New York Yankees owner George Steinbrenner with the feeling that Guidry was not about to be traded, and that agreement would be reached on a contract extension.

Lucas' 31 leads Nets win

Maurice Lucas led New Jersey with 3 points, including a basket at the final buzzer, as the Nets broke a five-game losing streak with a 115-112 victory over Milwaukee to highlight NBA action Wednesday. The win raised the Nets' record to 12-22, while the Bucks dropped to 24-10 . . . Elsewhere, Larry Bird scored 25 points and Chris Ford added 19 as Boston raced to its fifth consecutive victory, a 115-98 romp over Chicago . . . Darryl Dawkins scored 19 points and Julius Erving added 18 as Philadelphia mugged Cleveland, 103-79, marking the 76ers' eighth straight win . . . Michael Richardson hit for 25 points to lead the New York Knicks to a 119-103 thumping of Detroit . . . Forward Len "Truck" Robinson scored 17 points in the first period as Phoenix opened-up a seven-point lead and went on to defeat hapless Dallas, 115-102 . . . San Antonio scored 12 straight points in a three-minute span of the fourth quarter to overtake Houston, 113-107 behind the 22 points of Johnny Moore . . . Kelvin Ramsey popped in a 15-foot jump shot with five seconds remaining to give Portland a 115-113 win over Golden State, as the Trailblazers stretched their winning streak to seven games. The Warriors, who suffered their fifth straight loss, led 113-111 with 54 seconds remaining after Lloyd Free made two foul shots. But 12 seconds later, Portland guard Jim Paxson was fouled and tied the score with two free throws . . . Seattle's Wally Walker hit his final four shots of the second quarter to help give the Supersonics a 10-point halftime lead and Seattle went on to post a 101-94 win over Kansas City . . . Gregory Kelser, a 6-8 forward traded by Detroit to Seattle, failed the Sonics' physical examination Wednesday, but the club said it may keep him anyway.

LUCAS

Rangers keep Jets' streak alive

Dave Maloney began New York's five-goal first period and his brother, Don, completed it as the Rangers extended Winnipeg's consecutive-game winless slide to 29 games by blasting the Jets, 8-2, to highlight NHL action Wednesday. The Jets, who on Tuesday broke the NHL winless streak mark of 26 by the 1975-76 Kansas City Scouts, have gone two months without a victory. Their only win in a 1-24-7 season was on Oct. 17, 6-2 over Chicago . . . Elsewhere, Merlin Malinowski scored his 11th goal of the season and picked up three assists to lead Colorado to a 6-1 smashing of Chicago. The win ended a five-game losing streak for the Rockies . . . Mike Gartner and Bengt Gustafsson had a goal and an assist apiece as Washington defeated Edmonton, 5-2, to also snap a five-game losing streak . . . Blaine Stoughton snapped a 4-4 tie with his 13th goal of the season to lead Hartford to a 5-4 squeaker over Boston . . . Anton Stastny scored twice, including the game-winning to spark Quebec to a 4-1 thumping of St. Louis . . . Dan Maloney led Toronto to its second victory over Minnesota this week with a tie-breaking goal at 18:01 of the third period that enabled the Maple Leafs to post a 4-2 verdict over the North Stars . . . Two unusual goals by rookie Keith Acton in the final period allowed Montreal to rally and tie Vancouver 4-4.

DeJesus arrested in murder case

Former World Boxing Council lightweight champion Esteban DeJesus was charged with first-degree murder Wednesday in San Juan, Puerto Rico, police said. Authorities said DeJesus, 29, who held the WBC title two years, was charged in San Juan District Court in connection with the Thanksgiving Day shooting death of 17-year-old Roberto Cintron Gonzalez. The victim, who worked for his father in San Juan, was shot with a .38-Caliber pistol. Until Sugar Ray Leonard did it last month, DeJesus was the only fighter to have beaten Roberto Duran . . . Joe Louis, the former world heavyweight boxing champion, remained in Methodist Hospital in Houston for a check-up Wednesday. Louis, 66, entered the hospital Monday, having returned there periodically since undergoing heart surgery in 1977.

Cal found guilty, but escapes penalties

Academic violations have been discovered in the case of former University of California All-American Chuck Muncie, the Pac-10 Conference announced. But Cal will escape punishment because of the conference's four-year statute of limitations. The NCAA also has a four-year statute of limitations. The Muncie case is similar those which resulted in probation and a year of Rose Bowl ineligibility for five Pac-10 schools this season . . . Free agent quarterback Rob Hertel was signed by the Philadelphia Eagles Wednesday to replace tight end Ken Dunek on the NFL team's active roster. Dunek, a first-year player from Memphis State, was placed on injured reserve with an ankle injury. Hertel, a USC graduate, was released by the Eagles Dec. 5 to make room on the roster for Dunek . . . University of Pittsburgh defensive end Hugh Green was named as the 44th recipient of the Maxwell Award for the outstanding college football player in the country . . . Boston University Coach Rick Taylor is the new head football coach at Pennsylvania.

Machado makes a challenge to NASL

Mario Machado, newly appointed commissioner of the American Soccer League, Wednesday challenged the North American Soccer League to a game between the circuits' championship teams in 1981. "I propose that the championship teams of our respective leagues meet in one game a year for the benefit of a charity," said Machado upon assuming his new position. "If that is not acceptable," he said, "we would be agreeable to an all-star game between the two leagues."

Bud Delp, the colorful and controversial trainer of Spectacular Bid, joined his colt Wednesday as an Eclipse Award winner. The Bid was voted Horse of the Year and best older horse Tuesday in balloting by the National Turf Writers Association. Daily Racing Forum and Thoroughbred Racing Association when the 1980 equine champions were named.

Eric Heiden, winner of five gold medals in speed skating in the Olympic Games at Lake Placid last February, was among five finalists for the AAU's Sullivan Award as the nation's outstanding amateur athlete for 1980.

STAUBACH'S DESIRE . . .

it's not a good sign," Staubach says. "The routine of football is something veteran players are fighting all the time. I started to fight it.

"The idea of the offseason program and knowing I'd have to rush to the practice field every afternoon starting in April . . . then leaving home for five weeks of camp in summer. I dreaded it. I couldn't stand being away again for five weeks.

At the beginning of your career, training camps are a bit easier because you're fighting for a job. You're headed toward new ventures in football. That is such an important time, too, getting ready for a regular season. But there's that routine. After a long time I guess you just get tired of it.

"I could never go into a season of not being completely prepared physically and mentally. For me that meant starting right in after the last season ended.

OTHERWISE, Staubach's reasons for retirement ranged from the customary desire to spend more time with his wife and five children to a situation that was unique to him.

His age — he completed last year at 37 — was less a concern than the number of concussions he's suffered dating back to high school.

While undergoing stringent testing last spring by a neurologist and a neurosurgeon he recounted 20 football knockouts. What worried Stauback, wife Marianne and the doctors was the recent trend.

During the '79 season he had suffered five concussions, within a calendar year there had been six. The specialists strongly suggested he consider putting his arm in mothballs.

"CONCUSSIONS WERE a fairly good-sized factor," Staubach concedes. "I had enough of those to warrant concern by others, if I'd had another it would have been a big deal to the public. And I know I'd have had some more. I couldn't have gotten away without it as long as they still have hard ground.

"So that was a signal to me. If I hadn't had that signal, I don't know what I would have done. Really, the factors intermingle. You can't say which one weighs more than the others."

In summary then, what pushed Staubach out of uniform were three reasons: 1) diminished zest for preparing to play; 2) desire to devote more time to his family; 3) the potential health risk if he continued. It was the last factor that Staubach says sets him apart from other players considering retirement.

EACH CASE IS individual and should be so judged, he says. For an illustration he pointed to former Cowboys rival Craig Morton, quarterback of the Denver Broncos. Morton plays on at age 37, and by a fateful coincidence shares the same Feb. 5 birthday as Roger.

"Look at Craig," he says, "he's a good example. Not so long ago everybody thought he should retire. Now he's really picked up Denver. He looked as though he was out of the picture but now he's the hero again and playing great.

"It's hard to predict when the time is exactly right to leave the game. Had you predicted Craig's situation you'd probably thought it was best for him to retire. Particularly after Denver got down on him last year and wound up trading for Matt Robinson.

"So what does Craig do: He's been the main reason Denver has been winning."

OTHER THAN game day glows, Staubach's retreat into the civilian world has been painless. As an admitted aide to the withdrawal process he worked the 1980 season as an NFL analyst for CBS-TV and may continue that role in the future.

Campbell, Sipe head AFC team

NEW YORK (AP) — Quarterback Brian Sipe of Cleveland, the National Football League's leading passer, and two-time rushing champion Earl Campbell of Houston are starters on the American Conference Pro Bowl team announced Wednesday.

The San Diego Chargers dominate the 40-man AFC squad 20 on offense, 17 on defense, 3 specialists with eight players, including their entire passing contingent, selected by the 14 head coaches and NFL Players Association members in the conference.

The National Conference squad for the Feb. 1 all-star game in Honolulu's Aloha Stadium is to be announced Thursday.

THE CHARGERS' starters are wide receiver John Jefferson, tight end Kellen Winslow, defensive end Fred Dean and defensive tackles Gary Johnson and Louie Kelcher. The three San Diego reserves are quarterback Dan Fouts, wide receiver Charlie Joiner and guard Doug Wilkerson.

Mew England placed seven players on the AFC squad — starters Stanley Morgan at wide receiver, John Hannah at guard and cornerback Mike Haynes, plus defensive end Julius Adams, middle linebacker Steve Nelson, safety Tim Fox and place-kicker John Smith.

The other running back, starting along side Campbell, is Joe Cribbs of the Buffalo Bills, the only rookie on the team. Campbell is the runaway NFL rushing leader with 1,731 yards. Cribbs is second in the AFC with 1,505 yards.

THE DEFENDING Super Bowl champions, the Pittsburgh Steelers, have three starters — center Mike Webster, middle linebacker Jack Lambert and safety Donnie Shell.

DAVE MOLLICA

Former OCC, Mesa standout Mollica lauded

Former Orange Coast College and Costa Mesa High standout Dave Mollica, a senior quarterback at Southern Utah State, has received honorable mention on The Associated Press Little All America team.

Mollica, who battled back from a serious injury to guide his team to a third-place finish in the Rocky Mountain Conference, threw for 1,620 yards and 17 touchdown passes in nine games this year.

In addition, he carried the ball 134 times for 392 net yards and six more TDs. He led his conference in both passing and total offense.

Mollica's 223.6 yards per contest average was second in the nation among National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics (NAIA) players.

In 1978, Mollica fell through a glass shower door, requiring 350 stitches. The 6-1, 180-pounder still earned a scholarship to Southern Utah State where he was used as a defensive back during his junior year.

After months of therapy, Mollica managed to build up the strength in his arm and eventually earned the No. 1 signal calling duties for the Thunderbirds.

He is the son of Donald and Caryle Mollica of Costa Mesa. Mrs. Mollica is the gymnastics coach at Costa Mesa High.

YACHTSMEN IRKED . . .

person, name picture or sports performance to be used to advertise a product or service used in yacht racing would lose his amateur status if he receives compensation either directly or indirectly.

THE REPORT ALSO questioned the status of the amateur who engaged in straight out professional yachting as proposed by the Professional Yacht Racing Association (PYRA), suggesting a two year probationary period before he could assume his amateur standing.

The list goes on and on with certain reservations, but here are some of vehement oppositions recorded.

The so-called professionals contribute to the sport and share their expertise with the outright amateur.

Dennis Conner (recent defender of the America's Cup): "More and more international sailing is getting more professional. We live in a world community and cannot afford to cut ourselves off from the rest of the world. If this proposal is passed it would be necessary for the U.S. Olympic Sailing Committee to withdraw from the Union (USYRU). The committee did not reflect the involved people it would effect."

DAVE ULLMAN (sailmaker and Olympic class sailor): "We have looked at the subject and feel this is more of an off-shore matter than one-design. If adopted it would mean the end of the U.S. Olympic program as we know it. The quality of one-design products (sails, spars, etc) would be reduced and the cost increased. The report seems to legislate against expertise."

Mark Reynolds (champion one-design sailor in several classes): "One-design racing does not have a problem with professionals. A review of the entry lists in Olympic class events indicate there are fewer professionals than amateurs in the top five finishers of these events. One-design sailors enjoy sailing in an open category and do not approve of the proposal."

Bill Ficker (Newport Beach architect and 1970 defender of the America's Cup): The entire idea of professional rankings as described in the proposal should be given no further consideration. If there is merit in separating professionals from amateurs, the proposed manner is not the way to do it. Sailing would be in continual turmoil and the fine line between amateur and professional would become a travesty."

John B. Kilroy (world class international offshore racer): "I believe that much technological improvement in equipment and the skills of yachting has emerged from the crucible of yacht racing through the input of owners, crew, sailmakers, yacht builders, mast builders, hydraulic and winch experts, materials experts, aerospace engineers and other disciplines.

The commodores of two local yacht clubs, Newport Harbor Yacht Club and Balboa Yacht Club, addressed letters to USYRU opposing the proposed rules on professionalism.

Much of this accomplishment has been visualized at sea under competitive conditions. I would vigorously oppose the USYRU proposals as presently drafted."

Bucs overpower Spartans

The Orange Coast College Pirates rolled off 12 unanswered points in the firsh half to take control and went on to easily outdistance MiraCosta, 81-59, in the first round of the Holiday Classic basketball tournament at Saddleback College Wednesday night.

The Pirates, 6-1, after watching the Spartans connect on their first shot of the game, unleashed six straight baskets and were never headed after that.

Guard Chris Beasley, who went into the game as the team's leading scorer (16.0), led his teammates with 22 points and six rebounds. Beasley was six for 10 from the floor and 10 of 12 from the free throw line.

The Spartans who tried to muscle their way past the Pirates, were sorely out-rebounded, 42-23, and had trouble from the field as they hit only 36 percent (21 of 58) of their shots. The Pirates were 51 percent (24 of 47) from the floor and had 40 shots from the charity stripe (they connected on 33).

The Pirates had three other players finish in double figures as Rich Kindorf, out of Corona del Mar High, had 11 points and a team-high nine rebounds, while John Saunders and Greg Khronfeldt had 14 and 10 points, respectively.

"I thought we played well although we didn't handle their press well," said OCC Coach Tandy Gillis, who has his team on a five-game winning streak. "It was a good experience playing them. They really hammered us, but we held our poise. We came down and hit shots when we had to have them."

The Bucs' victory sets up a semifinal game against Santa Barbara CC Friday night (5:30).

Eddo, Hill lead Tritons' win

San Clemente High's basketball team is running and gunning this season and with a 6-0 record, the Tritons may never stop running.

Wednesday night in the opening round of the San Dieguito Tournament, San Clemente's backcourt tandem of John Eddo and James Hill charged up the Tritons' fast break attack and the result was an easy 83-55 win over San Pasqual High.

In other tournament action, Estancia romped to a 65-43 victory over Vista.

For San Clemente, Eddo, a 6-1 swingman, scored 30 points (18 in the first half) and Hill, a 6-1 point guard, scored 22 (14 in the first half) to give the Tritons an insurmountable 46-21 halftime lead.

San Pasqual was able to hit just one shot from the field in the first quarter as San Clemente built a commanding 24-8 lead.

Tonight, San Clemente will face Burroughs (Burbank) in second round action.

Estancia (5-0) got balanced scoring all around to advance to second-round play.

Jeff Gardner, a guard, scored 14 points and forward Mike Markel added 11 to pave the way for the Eagles. Guard Ken Hall also scored in double figures with 10.

The Eagles got strong rebounding from their front line as Steve Kraiss pulled down seven and Markel had six.

In other prep action:

Corona del Mar 47, El Dorado 35

The Sea Kings, leading 33-27 going into the final quarter, got three straight baskets from center Mark Spinn to put the game away and give Corona del Mar a berth in tonight's second round of the Troy tournament.

Spinn and Jeff Pries were high scorers for both teams as each threw in 12 points.

Pries, a forward, pulled down six rebounds to lead Corona del Mar's strong board game.

Forward Steve Moore and guard Chris Lynch added 10 points each for the 4-1 Sea Kings.

Edison 91, Villa Park 74

In the first round of the La Quinta tournament, Edison (4-2) got a good team effort to hold off a late surge by the Spartans in the fourth quarter.

The Chargers got out to a 28-14 first quarter lead with forward Rick DiBernardo and center Richard Chang leading the way.

Edison upped its lead to 78-50 after three quarters, then was able to substitute freely as Villa Park rebounded to make the score more respectable.

DiBernardo and Chang were the top scorers with 22 and 20 points respectively. Bill Vogelsang, a guard, added 14 points as all five Edison starters scored in double figures.

Edison plays Valencia tonight at 8 o'clock in second round play.

Westminster 61, Melodyland 49

In the consolation semifinals of the Anaheim tournament, Westminster (2-5) jumped out to a big lead (21-8) in the first quarter and was never headed.

Forward Mick Delavallade scored 25 points for the Lions while Bob Kershner had 13 points and 10 rebounds.

The margin of victory may have been greater had not Westminster shot as poorly as it did at the free throw line.

The Lions connected on only 12 of 25 attempts from the line.

University 82, Pacifica 57

The Trojans wound up their pre-season at 6-3 with a big performance from center Tim McLaughlin who poured in a game-high 26 points.

University got off to a 16-1 lead and led 38-23 at the half.

"We attacked their press very well tonight," first year head coach Jeff Cunningham said. "I think all we need to do now is maintain our concentration throughout the game so that we don't lose the lead."

McLaughlin got help from Brad Guess and Randy Meyers who tossed in 16 and 10 points respectively.

Mater Dei 66, St. Francis 54

Guard Bob Motis tossed in 21 points to lead the way for the Monarchs (2-4) in a non-league game at Mater Dei.

St. Francis forward Haden Eaves hit his first six shots in the first quarter but the high-scoring senior was able to score just six points in the second half against Mater Dei's 2-3 zone defense.

Brett Trickett added 16 points for Mater Dei.

UCI's Magee No. 1

UC Irvine's Kevin Magee is the NCAA leader in both scoring and rebounding in Division I and the Anteater team is tops in scoring with a 102.4 average per game, according to the latest NCAA statistics.

Magee is hitting 32.2 points a game and pulling down 15.8 rebounds. He leads American University star Russell Bowers in scoring by almost five points per outing. Bowers is at 27.4.

Clark Kellogg of Ohio State is the second leading rebounder in the NCAA Division I with a 14.7 average.

UCI's team leading total is well ahead of runnerup Clemson's average of 99.5 per game.

Magee is 25th in field goal percentage with a .663 mark, hitting 65-of-98 on the year.

GWC faces northern foes

VISALIA — A tournament full of Northern California community college basketball teams awaits Golden West College here, beginning tonight.

The Rustlers, competing in their first College of the Sequoias Tournament, square off against Fresno CC tonight at 9 in the first round.

Also entered in the tourney are San Jose, Kings River (formerly Reedley), West Hills, Foothill, College of the Sequoias and the only other Southern California team, Citrus.

A victory tonight for the Rustlers, 7-3, would send them up against the winner of the San Jose-Kings River contest Friday night at 7.

Should GWC lose, the Rustlers would meet the loser of the same game at 3 p.m. Friday.

The Rustlers are coming off a lopsided 119-60 win over a team from the Pt. Mugu Naval Station.

Area duck hunters optimistic

Duck hunting in the Southland has gotten off to a slower than normal start this year, but waterfowlers are extremely optimistic about what is to come during the next remaining third of the season.

The build up of both big ducks and honkers in all parts of Southern California is encouraging. Our local Back Bay is the resting area for many kinds of ducks and other migrating birds and it is full of birds.

LOCAL DUCK HUNTER, Harry Rinker expects very good shooting to take place in all parts of the Southland during the next few weeks as more and more birds are being forced out of northern states. Barre Stephens of Newport Beach reports there is a huge population of both ducks and geese in the Alturas area and that they are staging for a movement south.

Bob Robb of Huntington Beach enjoyed a couple of back to back limits of big ducks while shooting in Riverside County this past week as did Dr. Kozy Protopappus of Corona del Mar, who hunted the Splatter "S" Duck Club.

Shoots have been rather inconsistant for more gunners as unusually warm and clear weather has affected the movements of ducks. Gary Myers, also of Newport, says there are new birds working into clubs in Pt. Mugu area and that this is an indication of better shooting to come.

QUAIL HUNTING HAS BEEN very good this year in all parts of California and especially good below the border. This year has topped all previous years in valley quail production, and upland game hunters are finding lots of coveys of birds to hunt.

The quail season runs through the last week of January 1981 and will even show more improvement when cooler weather moves into the Southland.

Our huge fires last month will most assuredly have an affect on the wild life of Southern California for a few years to come and the worst is still to come if we receive rains like we have the past few years. Look to heavy flooding in many parts of Orange County and a great loss in habitat if the rains come in January.

Many big game hunters look to other states when it comes to deer hunting, but maybe deer hunters should take a longer look at California hunting come next September. California has probably the third highest population of mule deer in America and each year there are thousands of deer harvested by successful hunters in all parts of the state.

ACCORDING TO RESULTS from tags returned this year the Department of Fish and Game reports that the deer kill in 1980 was one of the best in recent years, and further added that the carryover into next year should produce good hunting as well.

FRESH WATER ANGLERS are doing very well on trophy-sized trout at both Irvine and Anaheim lakes. These two nearby lakes are being heavily stocked on a weekly basis and those trout anglers fishing from shore as well as in boats are returning home with nice stringers of fighting rainbow trout.

Other lakes in the Southland are also producing good fishing during calmer days. Lake fishing will most likely begin to slow when the rains and winds come.

Ocean fishing remains fair to good with most anglers concentrating on bottom fish on a daily basis. Phil Tozer, spokesman for Davey's Locker at the Pavilion, reports that most anglers going on to the deep water fishing holes off Newport are returning to the docks with limits and near limits of good eating bottom feeders.

Tozer says there is still some surface action taking place along the coast as no rough seas have moved in yet to turn over our local waters. Loads at most all landing are very light through the week, but reservations should be made in advance for weekend trips.

BAY FISHING IN NEWPORT and Huntington harbors is pretty good for this time of the year with those who know how to work the tides and bay structures getting into some good action for bass, croaker and small halibut. Rental skiffs are available at the Pavilion and at Art's in Balboa for those who want to get out over the Christmas holidays and do a little easy angling.

Big game fishing off Baja has returned to its normal pace after being slowed earlier this month with strong winds that kept most anglers on shore. After the winds died down good catches of marlin, dorado, wahoo and tuna were made.

There is plenty of room at all resorts in Baja now and airline connections out of Los Angeles or Tijuana are good on Aeromexico. Many anglers wait until the spring to visit Baja, but with resorts filling up fast for peak periods, first time visitors should make arrangements to get down as easily as possible for some good ocean angling under sunny skies.

For a complete update on fishing in all parts of Mexico contact Angler's Center in Newport or Bisbee's on Balboa Island.

Rustlers' balancing act

Everyone's scoring for Golden West five

By CURT SEEDEN
Of the Daily Pilot Staff

It was a couple of weeks before the junior college basketball season opener and Golden West College Coach Jim Greenfield had these speculations about two of his players:

Truiett Hatton: "Truiett possesses all the talent to be one of the best in the state. He is the key to our offense."

Darin Bowen: "Darin is potentially one of the Southern Cal Conference's better forwards. We need a big year from Darin because of the lack of a big scorer like Walt Evans."

WELL, HATTON WAS ruled academically ineligible about a day before the season opened.

JUNIOR COLLEGES

Bowen has a badly sprained ankle and won't even be able to run for a week, and Evans, of course, has gone on to greener pastures (UC Santa Barbara).

You would think the repercussions would be devastating to Greenfield's plans. Well, you're wrong.

Not only has the GWC team rolled up an impressive 7-3 record, but the Rustlers are doing it with a coach's dream — a balanced scoring attack.

ALL FIVE STARTERS are averaging in double figures this year, led by 6-2 sophomore Jim Eldridge out of Huntington Beach High with a 16.2 average.

The Rustlers have also received some excellent board work and surprising scoring ability from Randy Heidenreich, a sophomore center from Marina High.

"He (Heidenreich) will probably score a lot more for us in the future, that is, if he gets the ball more," says Greenfield. But with the talented array of shooters he has, Greenfield doesn't have to worry too much about who gets the ball. Anyone can do it.

FOR EXAMPLE, Tuesday night, freshman Sal Gayton connected on 12 of 14 shots from the floor and finished with 26 points as GWC mauled a team from the Pt. Mugu Naval Station, 119-60.

The Rustler balance was never more evident than at GWC's own tournament. At least four players reached double figures in each of the Rustlers' three games.

Yachtsmen take off

Yacht racers along the Southern California coast are taking a long winter holiday during the final two weeks of the year, most of them devoting their time decorating their boats for the nightly tournaments of light from Oceanside to Marina del Rey.

UC Irvine defeated

SAN FRANCISCO — UC Irvine's women's basketball team got off to a hot start, leading the University of San Francisco 8-2, but the Anteaters quickly cooled off and the undefeated Dons went on to a 64-57 win Wednesday night.

UCI (7-3) was paced by Norma Leibfreid's 16 points and 14 by Kathryn Hamilton. Diana Meier chipped in with 10.

Tonight, the Anteaters travel to Santa Clara for a 7:30 clash with the University of Santa Clara.

Even the experts can't solve economy puzzle

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK — When the people who used to know are asking the questions now, you have to wonder and worry about where the economy is going. Guesses count today. Is there anything better?

Q. Where is the prime rate, now 21 percent, headed?

A. Current thinking is that it will reach at least 22 percent or 23 percent. However, these projections rise with every rise in the prime. Some published forecasts now go as high as 28 percent.

CUNNIFF

In listening to any forecaster today you must realize that they are as perplexed as anyone else. Some of them haven't yet finished mailing their 1981 forecasts, and yet those forecasts are already dated.

Q. What about consumer prices?

A. The consumer price index is now at more than 12 percent, although the underlying inflation rate, which excepts volatile prices such as fuel and mortgage interest costs, is closer to 9 percent.

Higher costs for oil are expected to push up both rates.

Anticipating the recent OPEC action allowing oil prices to rise by about 10 percent, one big investment firm raised its underlying rate forecast one point.

Most analyses from private sector economists project consumer prices as rising at about the same rate as they are now, which is about 1 percent a month. However, high interest rates, which in theory depress demand and lower prices, can contribute to them in the short run.

THE MOST EXTREME CONSUMER inflation forecast seems to be by Bert Dohmen-Ramirez, editor of the Wellington Letter, an investment advisory service. He tells subscribers to expect a 30 percent peak by mid-1981.

Q. Gold prices?

A. You can find forecasts of any price to $2,000 or so in 1981. The gold market involves serious, informed investors who are properly concerned about the security of their assets.

But it also attracts those who, like primitive man, tend to worship gold as a piece of the sun. Speculators flock to gold. So do those with neurotic fears.

In recent days gold has fallen to $575, a 15 percent loss in less than three weeks. But isn't gold supposed to rise during times of economic and political instability? That's the theory, but it hasn't been so.

Q. Home prices?

A. Median home prices are falling. The National Association of Realtors says existing single-family houses sold for $62,700 in October, $1,500 less than in the previous month.

Did the decline result from high interest rates, as many believe, or was it merely a seasonal factor — the onset of bad weather? That question hasn't yet been resolved, but the guess is that, yes, those expensive buying terms have been at least a major cause of the decline.

Q. What about stocks?

A. It's confusing. The rule of thumb is that stocks fall as interest rates rise. True, the market has lost considerable ground in the past few weeks, but it remains higher on average than it was last January.

In addition, hundreds of individual stocks have doubled in the past year, and the reception for new issues have been good.

Where will stocks be going? You can take your pick. Some well-regarded analysts foresee the Dow Jones industrial average doubling over the next few years. Some well-regarded analysts see it fall sharply.

PERHAPS THE SHORT-TERM consensus thinking is that those high and rising interest rates will make a dent. Wright Investors' Service of Bridgeport, Conn., recently told clients that it believes "most common stocks are now more than fully priced in relation to current interest rates and that a downward correction is more likely than not."

But when the so-called experts begin asking your opinion, and they are, you begin to appreciate that your guess may be as good as theirs.

XM-1 tank dealt delays

DETROIT (AP) — Chrysler Corp. is at least two months behind schedule building the Army's new XM-1 tank, the Detroit News has reported.

The newspaper said the problem, which involves a subcontractor, could delay the weapon's deployment as much as a year.

The XM-1, considered the most sophisticated tank in the world, is designed to replace the M-60 tank built by Chrysler and used by the Army since 1959.

A Chrysler subcontractor, Avco Lycoming Division in Stratford, Conn., has been slow in supplying turbine engines for the tank, said Jacob D. Neu, manufacturing vice president for Chrysler Defense Inc., a wholly owned Chrysler Corp. subsidiary.

KBS COMES TO NEWPORT BEACH
Now local investors can enjoy personal service and untraditional rates
Now you can buy and sell through a national broker at big savings on commissions—without giving up most of the personal service that you're accustomed to.
We'll save you up to two-thirds of the commissions that you pay the full-commission houses. On some transactions we even beat the bare-bones discounters. Try us and see. Call or write for free brochure and commission discount schedule.

IF YOU ARE A STRANGER BE ONE NO MORE.
By Terry Grant, R. Ph.
This is a friendly pharmacy. We will be delighted to welcome you as a new friend and give you any possible information we know, or supply any pharmacy service we can ethically perform. If you have the time, inspect our pharmacy. You will see many of your favorite products.
You will be glad to note we have an efficient, well equipped prescription laboratory, with thousands of different medicines classified so we can locate each one quickly. We are prepared to fill any prescription, even those prescribed by physicians in distant cities.
YOUR DOCTOR CAN PHONE US when you need a medicine. Pick up your prescription if shopping nearby, or we will deliver promptly without extra charge. A great many people entrust us with their prescriptions. May we compound yours?

Smartness counts

Industry heads for robot era

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A robot that can tell the difference between a 2-inch screw and a 3-inch bolt and decide what to do with them makes a better worker than a robot that balks when anything but the bolt comes down the assembly line.

Development of such a "smart robot" is the aim of 30 scientists and engineers at Carnegie-Mellon University's new Robotics Institute, who hope their research will create the footsoldiers of the robotics revolution now sweeping industry.

"In a nutshell, we are trying to put artificial intelligence in robots," said Dr. Angel Jordan, dean of CMU's Carnegie Institute of Technology.

"CURRENT ROBOTS ARE nothing more than mechanisms that are programmed to do certain tasks in repetition. We want to add an element of artificial intelligence so they can make decisions or cope with changes," Jordan said in a recent interview.

A major project already under way is the development of robot systems for a "factory of the future" that have both human and robot workers.

But your future neighbor in this future factory won't look like the stumpy R2-D2 of "Star Wars." Industrial robots in CMU's labs instead are mechanical arms of varying degrees of flexibility, linked to computer "brains." Jordan said the new robots will have a sense of touch and what amounts to three-dimensional vision.

THE ROBOTICS INSTITUTE officially will open Dec. 9 with a seminar and a half-dozen robot demonstrations, said the institute director, Dr. Raj Reddy.

CMU President Richard Cyert said one big goal of the new institute is to develop robot systems equal to or better than those of the Japanese, who are the current world leaders.

The Japanese claim a total 30,000 robots in their factories. At the Zama factory of Nissan Motor Co., one of the most automated in the world, 96.4 percent of the body parts of Datsun cars are welded by robots performing in military-like precision.

INTRODUCTION OF ROBOTS into U.S. factories has been slow, despite initial claims of increased productivity, reduced errors and lower labor costs. About 4,500 robots are in use in the nation today, according to an official at Unimation Inc., a robot manufacturer.

The need to boost productivity in American factories is a big factor behind the push toward smarter robots.

"As a country we must increase productivity," said Cyert. "The robots look like a major factor in developing such increases."

CYERT SAID HE BELIEVES the economy of the future will create new jobs faster than the labor force can grow. Robots can take up the slack, he said.

Besides stepping into mill jobs, robots could be developed for hazardous jobs such as coal mining and nuclear work.

Tony Massaro, director of the robotics technology division of the Westinghouse Electric Corp., said robots already are moving into some of their least desirable factory jobs, such as spray painting and material handling.

Westinghouse has 30 robots working in its plants and plans to expand the force to 200 by the end of next year, he said.

Jeans makers wrangle over rodeo trade

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Do most rodeo cowboys wear Levi's?

Sure as a goose goes barefoot, you might say. But at the Grand National Rodeo here, the only cowboy found not wearing Wrangler's jeans was Lyle Sankey, saddle bronc rider from Branson, Mo.

"Yeah, I got a baggy pair of Levi's to wear for TV," he drawled.

IT WASN'T ORNERYNESS THAT caused Sankey to give up his Wrangler's.

It's because Levi's gives $750, $500 and $250 to the top three cowboys on the final night of a telecast rodeo — if they wear a Levi's garment.

It's often a mad scramble to find a Levi's shirt or vest, said David Allen, media director for the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association.

How could Levi's, the name synonymous with jeans and western wear, get into such a predicament.

THE ANSWER STARTS IN 1947, when Blue Bell Inc., a North Carolina maker of workclothes, decided to make workclothes for cowboys. The company recruited cowboys as consultants. Then it gave a pair of 13MWZ's — a code as familiar to a rodeo cowboy as the feel of his boots — to each member of the Rodeo Cowboys Association, the PRCA's predecessor.

"Cowboys wear the jean because it fits," said David Little, director of special events for the Wrangler division of Blue Bell.

"They allow a lot of freedom. They don't bind," said Bud Monroe, 28, a saddle-bronc rider from Billings, Mont.

EVEN THOUGH IT CAME OUT with a comparable jean some years ago, Levi's can't make much of a dent in the 13MWZ market of a million jeans sold last year.

"The biggest reason is that we all wear 'em," said Bob Priolo, a stock contractor from South San Francisco.

A Wrangler survey of 3,000 PRCA cowboys showed that 78 percent chose Wrangler's, 13 percent chose Lee Riders and 6 percent chose Levi's.

A few weeks ago the PRCA chose the 13MWZ as the official rodeo competition jean. In thanks, Wrangler's is giving all PRCA members a $25 gift certificate.

As the disco cowboy fad tramples the country, Levi's and Wrangler do more advertising in rodeo. Levi's spends about $350,000 in prize money and ads on six pro rodeo telecasts. It won't be offering the money next year, because the company no longer wants to make wearing its products a condition for prize money.

WRANGLER, MEANWHILE, HAS CREATED a new rodeo event: a $200,000 pro rodeo bullfighters championship.

Levi's spokesman Bud Johns says one reason Wrangler will continue its share of the market is because top cowboys are paid to wear Wrangler's during promotional appearances. But he's philosophical about the situation.

"It's actually a very limited segment of the total jeans market. So what do you do? Set up the fit where the market is, or to fit a limited market? We chose to fit to the larger market."

It's all friendly competition, said Little. Levi's is the No. 1 apparel manufacturer, Blue Bell is No. 2. Besides, the same survey that showed Wrangler's popularity said most cowboys preferred Resistol hats. Levi's bought the company that makes them last year.

Dump sites fought

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — Researchers have found some 300 chemical dumping sites in Holland — one the size of 80 football fields — that pose possible health threats, government officials say.

A national survey of legal and illegal chemical dumps was ordered in May after researchers found toxic chemicals in landfill under a housing project outside Rotterdam.

The evacuation and excavation of that site will cost $85 million, with cleanup costs of all the sites topping $500 million, the Environment Ministry said.

ABC still the silliest

EDITOR'S NOTE — AP Television Writer Peter Boyer has to watch a lot of television, and sometimes it gets a little silly — the programming, that is. In this column, he imagines a Coalition on Television Silliness that takes stock of the phenomenon.

By PETER J. BOYER

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Coalition on Television Silliness, a little-known watchdog organization based in Eagle Rock, has named ABC the No. 1 network in TV silliness for 1980. NBC finished a close second, followed by CBS.

For the third consecutive year, ABC's "Laverne and Shirley" was named silliest series, with an average of eight minutes of unredeeming silliness per episode.

The coalition was founded five years ago by Dr. Noroan S. Neer, a local psychiatrist and consumer activist. In announcing this year's survey, Neer said:

"The documented dangers of televised silliness are shocking. From specific triggering of imitative behavior to broader effects on our nation's moral fiber, reasonable people can no longer ignore the harmful effects of massive amounts of televised silliness."

The "Silliest TV Genre" of 1980 was the celebrity competition show, ranging from "Battle of Network Stars" to "City vs. Country Showdown." Silliest of these, Neer says, was a recent NBC entry called "Battle of Beverly Hills."

"This program logged 94 minutes of pure silly," says Neer, "and it was only a 97-minute show.

SILLIEST SHOWS ON TV...

Hollywood celebrities played tug-of-war while announcers called the action. It was distressing.

"Predictably, it triggered imitative behavior in a small town in the Midwest — Dollsborough, I think. It was too cold there to try the swimming pool competition, so the townspeople divided themselves into two groups and held a wacky tug-of-war on a frozen pond. The ice cracked and the mayor hasn't been seen since."

A perennial Coalition target is CBS' "Circus of the Stars," which was broadcast last Sunday and scored big in the ratings.

"What is frightening about this show," says Neer, "is that oh so serious announcer who whispers in serious tones the dangers involved in each star's performance. You know, a TV starlet will count backwards from 10 while riding on a horse and the guy soberly whispers, 'Ladies and gentlemen — Miss Twinkle is not attached to that horse by a safety belt!'

"What I'd like to hear the guy say is, 'Ladies and gentlemen — who would ever believe that so many of you sit captively watching this dreck!'"

The 10 silliest series, as the Coalition on TV Silliness ranked them, were:

"Laverne and Shirley," ABC; "That's Incredible!" ABC; "Flo," CBS; "Too Close For Comfort" ABC; "Three's Company," ABC; NBC's Wednesday night schedule "Real People," "Facts of Life" and "Diff'rent Strokes"; "Games People Play" NBC; "One Day at a Time," CBS.

"Americans experience at least 100 times more silliness on TV than they experience in real life," says Neer. "The immediate and cumulative effects of watching so much silliness on television have been proven quite damaging."

"We are," Neer warned, "on the verge of becoming a nation of wackos."

Curb Q&A slated

"Voters's Pipeline" goes to Sacramento for an exclusive interview with Lt. Gov. Mike Curb on Friday at 7:30 p.m. on KOCE, Channel 50.

Jim Cooper questions Curb on the California voters' mandate for change and also the subsequent new leadership in both the Assembly and the Senate. Curb also projects how having a former California governor in the White House will affect the state.

Other issues to be covered include the problems of handling an estimated state budget of $23.9 billion (with a $700 million deficit), plus a candid discussion on long-standing disagreements between Curb and Gov. Jerry Brown.

The program repeats Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

Laguna, Huntington talent excels

BEST ACTOR
David Paul

BEST ACTRESS
Roslyn Nehls

(This is the fourth in a series of five columns reviewing the year 1980 in theater along the Orange Coast.)

When the smoke finally cleared from the uncounted performances in 47 community theater productions this year, four individual efforts stood above the rest.

And, though it may seem slightly unfair, the top acting honors are shared by only two of the 10 eligible theater groups — the Laguna Moulton Playhouse and the Huntington Beach Playhouse.

Exempt, of course, are the actors and actresses who appeared in an Irvine Community Theater production, since this writer is bound with hoops of steel to that organization.

Additionally, in what is hopefully an annual recognition, two performers have earned special mention for cameo appearances. Without further ado, here are the players who constituted the cream of the performing crop for 1980.

Intermission
Tom Titus

BEST ACTOR — David Paul for "The Goodbye People," Laguna Moulton Playhouse. Runner-up — George Woods for "First Monday in October," also at the Laguna Moulton Playhouse.

Honorable mention — Richard Yorba for "Godspell," San Clemente Community Theater; Martin Fuchs for both "The Imaginary Invalid" and "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum," Huntington Beach Playhouse; and J. D. Reicheiderfer for "Last of the Class," Westminster Community Theater.

BEST ACTRESS — Roslyn Nehls for "Ballroom," Laguna Moulton Playhouse. Runner-up — Noreen Farley for "The Gingerbread Lady," Saddleback Valley Community Theater.

Honorable mention — Carrie Mowery for "Laura," Huntington Beach Playhouse; Pat Allen for "Amahl and the Night Visitors," Newport Harbor Actors Theater; and Mary Benton for "Rashomon," Westminster Community Theater.

BEST SUPPORTING ACTOR — Kenneth Karp for "Laura," Huntington Beach Playhouse. Runner-up — Bob Engman for "The Goodbye People," Laguna Moulton Playhouse.

Honorable mention — Ken Smolka for "The Gingerbread Lady," Newport Theater Arts Center; Richard Sibley for "Tobacco Road," Lido Isle Players; and Bill Malkin for "Rashomon," Westminster Community Theater.

BEST SUPPORTING ACTRESS — Claudia Chace for "Bus Stop," Huntington Beach Playhouse. Runner-up — Jane Nigh for "Tobacco Road," Lido Isle Players.

Honorable mention — Carol Grant Smith for "House of Blue Leaves," Newport Harbor Actors Theater; Marty Green for "Picnic," Showcase Productions; and Karlene Bradley for "The Gingerbread Lady," Newport Theater Arts Center.

BEST CAMEOS — Robert Kokol for "Little Murders," Showcase Productions, and Ellen Hughes for "House of Blue Leaves," Newport Harbor Actors Theater.

These were the headliners in a year which saw more community theater productions than ever before, at least in the previous 15 years. Friday the spotlight narrows to two people whose contributions to the stage in 1980 mark them as the Daily Pilot's man and woman of the year in theater.

Christmas myth, madness

By MARY JANE SCARCELLO
Of the Daily Pilot Staff

Like a film run too fast, the Christmas season often becomes a frantic blur of shopping malls, office parties, addressing cards and cooking for the relatives.

"We get caught in our own craziness at this time of year," says Dr. Bobbe Sommer, a psychologist and family counselor.

Her seminars on "Christmas: the Myth, the Madness, the Meaning" are designed to help participants avoid the hectic holiday pace.

Dr. Sommer will speak tomorrow at Crown Valley Community Park, Saturday at the Advanced Health Center in Newport Beach and Sunday and Monday at Deerfield Community Park.

EXPLAINING THE word "myth" in the seminar title, she says, "Webster defines myth first as a traditional story. That's fine, because we need to pass on the positive traditions of the season.

"But the second meaning is 'an ill-founded belief held uncritically,' and that's what the holidays have become for many of us. We lose the aspect of rebirth and renewal in Christmas."

Even before Christianity, she says, man celebrated pagan holidays during the winter solstice. As the days shortened, early man was frightened by the cold and dark.

Toward the end of December, when days began to lengthen again, he knew the worst had passed and celebrated the return of light.

"Many major religions still mention or connect 'light' with their beliefs," she says, "and Christmas is a perfect time to 'look toward the light.'

"THAT'S THE POSITIVE side of the myth, as we move toward enlightenment."

But Dr. Sommer believes the negative side of the Christmas myth is a trend toward commercialism, with seasonal advertising beginning earlier each year.

"Advertising leads us to believe that we can find everlasting love and approval if we give or receive the perfect item, what I call 'the Great Gift.' But that's like waiting for Santa again as an adult."

THAT'S THE SECOND definition of myth, she says, the "ill-founded belief" which says happiness can be found in approval and validation from others.

To combat this, Dr. Sommer suggests using her own "Four Rs:" relax, reflect, reveal and re-create.

"If a person can take time to stop and relax, he can reflect on what is important to him.

"This reveals what's really happening around him, and he can have a re-creation, or rebirth, within himself," she says.

A sense of humor can help a person stand back to take a look at the absurdity of what's going on, she adds.

DR. SOMMER OFTEN uses a Stan Freberg record at her seminars in which he sings, "We wish you a Merry Christmas, and please buy our beer," to illustrate the point.

"Children are especially hit by this media blitz because they've had so much of it in their short lives," she says. "They need help to see the difference between the price of a gift and what it costs."

She explains that the price of a gift is the money paid for it, but the cost can be measured in time, thought or effort in selecting or making the gift.

"Families can make gifts or donate time and services instead of feeling that they have to spend, spend, spend," she notes.

"SOME FAMILIES do all the so-called 'right things' at Christmas, with the house decorated, fancy parties and expensive gifts, and outwardly they seem to be making it. But the excess can have a hollow ring, and afterward they ask, 'is this all there is?'

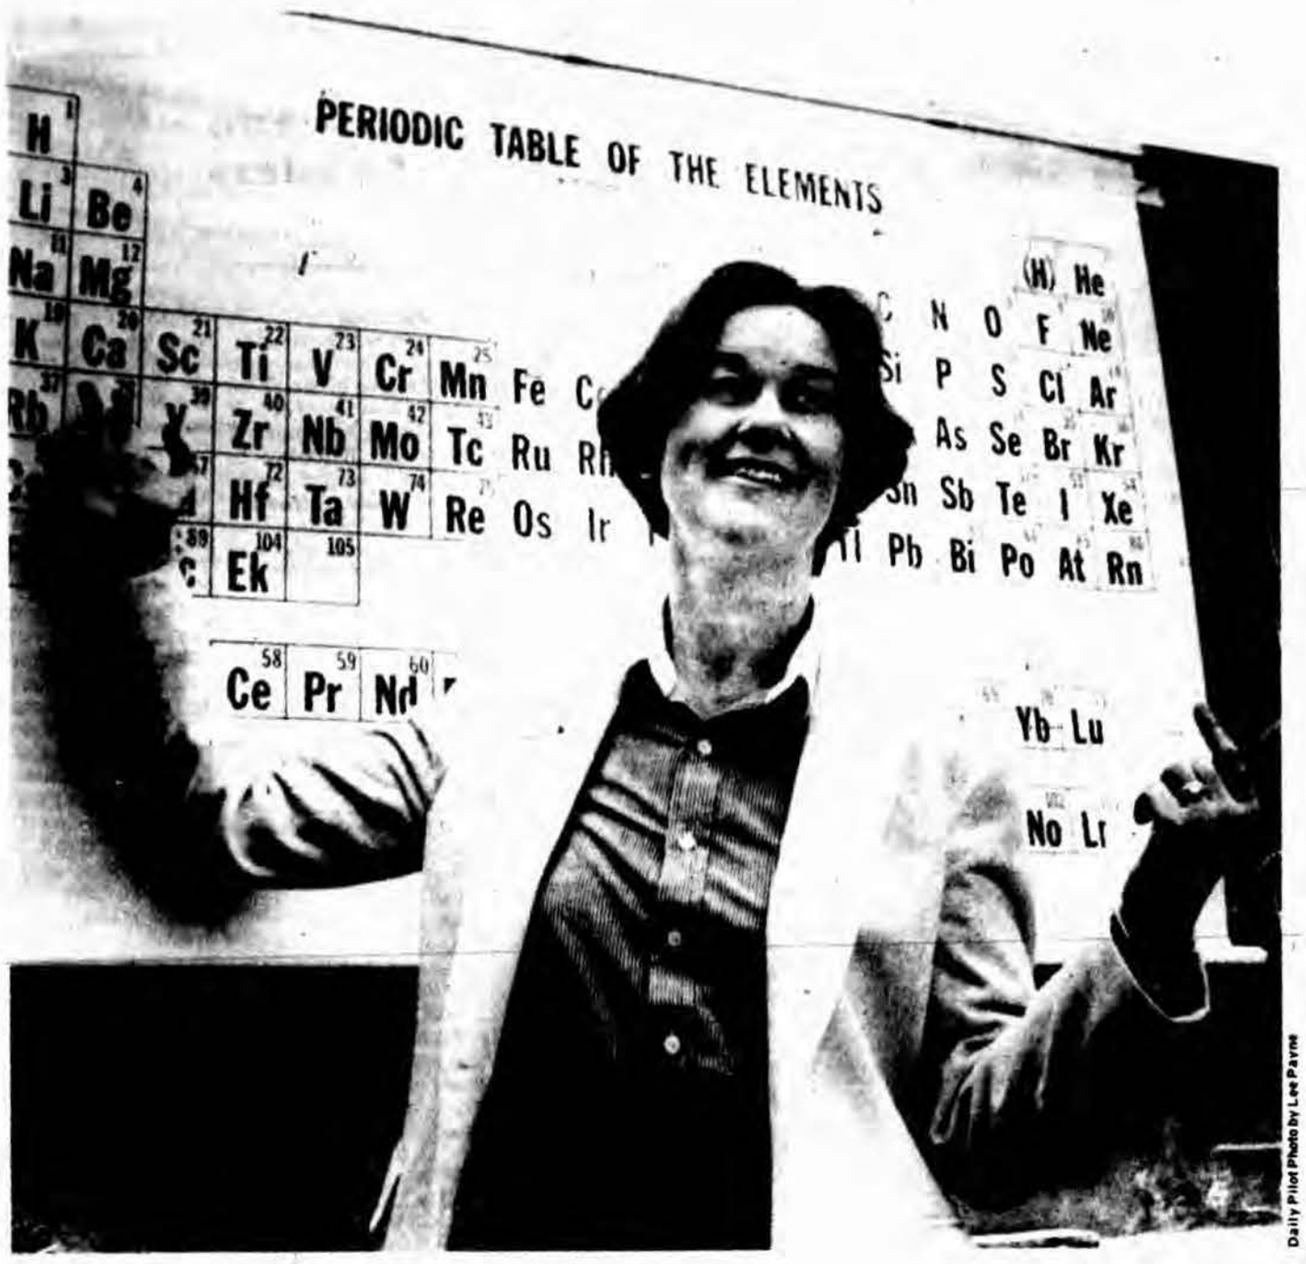

"Other families can't afford all that, but they try to keep up. This often leads to anger and feelings of depression.

"A third group gets disgusted at the spending, says 'bah, humbug,' and refuses to celebrate at all.

"I think that's like throwing out the baby with the bathwater," she says with a laugh.

"You do not have to keep buying — just be aware that you have a choice in how you celebrate."

High school students shouldn't slack off during their final year in school, warns Chemistry Professor Marie Taagepera.

Students need help

College preparation poor, says UCI professor

By JOEL C. DON
Of the Daily Pilot Staff

David DeRosier doesn't laugh when he says his high school education was a joke.

The UC Irvine junior took all the prerequisite college-prep courses, accumulated report cards brimming with As, received generous accolades from teachers and was admitted into gifted-student education programs.

Yet the biology major was worried.

Before matriculation, DeRosier took the advice from older friends. He sat in on a few UCI classes, one of which was the first-year chemistry class.

HE SAYS HE was shocked by what he found.

"I had taken chemistry in high school as a sophomore and had gotten an A in it," he said. "But I realized I knew absolutely nothing about chemistry."

So when DeRosier enrolled at the Irvine campus, he opted for a remedial chemistry course.

UCI chemistry professor Mare Taagepera knows DeRosier's story well. She's heard many like it from students in her Chemistry 10 class, a course designed for students lacking adequate preparation for the regular science sequence.

During the past three years, Dr. Taagepera surveyed more than 600 students in her remedial chemistry classes. She asked them in questionnaires about their high school curricula, reasons for choosing UCI and complaints about their preparation for college studies.

Students were critical of the quality of their secondary education.

"UP UNTIL FIVE or 10 years ago, we still had people who came in with much more than the minimum requirements," Dr. Taagepera said. "We're not getting that anymore."

Poorly prepared students are entering the halls of academia for several reasons, she said, including:

—Insufficient counseling services.

—Poor study habits and low motivation.

—Deficient high school curricula or students avoiding essential college-preparatory courses.

—Unqualified science and math teachers.

IN RESPONSE to the insufficient academic backgrounds and complaints of her students, Dr. Taagepera opened channels of communication to high school administrators and teachers. She realized high schools and colleges shared common problems: unprepared high school students can turn into college burdens.

Last year, the chemistry professor visited 10 high schools in Los Angeles and Orange counties. She also took some of her students to their alma maters to help spread the academic facts of life to their younger college-bound peers.

The UCI students stressed the need for more science and math preparation. Their instructor shared college student complaints with high school teachers and took a look at a few junior-level chemistry classes.

AT ONE HIGH SCHOOL, she said, students still were wrestling with conversions between fractions and decimals.

"They (students) were taking the right courses but the courses were on such a low level that they were nowhere near getting the university preparation," she said. "I was sitting there thinking 'My God, what am I going to do with these people in a year?'"

Dr. Taagepera took her concerns to the attention of state officials in October. She told the state Board of Education that many high school students lack adequate background and discipline to pursue an often rigorous post-secondary education.

And she has strong advice for high school students anticipating college and graduate work. She urges parents and high school counselors to encourage teen-agers to take a full regimen of basic core courses in science, math, social studies and languages.

Some students, she added, opt for lower-level courses to boost their grade point averages (GPA). But that'll make those students more vulnerable to a rigorous college curriculum.

For science majors, she recommends a four-year high school program including a minimum of four years of English, math and science classes. In addition, she advises pre-college science majors take three years of social sciences and two years of foreign language.

SHE WARNS high school seniors not to slack off during their last year in school. Rather, that's the time to gear up in preparation for four or more years of a university education.

Dr. Taagepera emphasizes that students should not be misled by high GPAs and other academic honors garnered in high school.

One high school's A-level work may be C level in another secondary school, she said. She prefers standardized testing such as the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) as a means of gauging readiness for college.

"Students think they have adequate preparation because unfortunately a lot of weight has been put on the GPA rather than the SAT," she said. "The student is in a very difficult position to know just precisely what she or he is prepared for.

"I think it would be more clear if we had a SAT (admission) minimum on math and verbal aptitude. With a 4.0 GPA and SAT math in the 300s and verbal in the 300s, the student would know he was in trouble."

Although Dr. Taagepera has seen a decline in chemistry aptitude, she stresses well-rounded high school curricula for social science majors as well.

"EVERYONE WILL BE voting on ecological issues, energy issues — they all need some background in sciences," she said. "I believe that science is basic in a curriculum."

Science majors, as well, shouldn't ignore basic reading and writing skills.

"We are definitely concerned about both science and non-science students," she said. "Our problem in the sciences has been that science has not been considered a basic skill.

"It's an elective and as such . . . sciences are being cut down in the high school, science resource centers are being closed off, physics courses are being phased out and in a technological age that's incredible."

Grandma's lights could be dangerous

Special to the Daily Pilot

West Lafayette, Inc. — The economics and safety of making do one more year with old strings of Christmas decorations is questionable.

"A person could well become part of the electrical circuit when hooking up frayed or brittle insulation on yuletide light decorations," says Aln Seuss, a professor at Purdue University.

THREE TYPES of holiday lights are in use today: the type that grandmother used with large lamps in which the failure of one lamp darkened the entire string, the large lamp wherein the failure of one did not affect the others and the modern miniature lamps.

"The older designs used more energy and radiated more heat than the tiny lamps," he says. "If sentiment is more important than cost, be sure to carefully inspect all older lights for defective plugs and insulation and bare and broken wires. Discard all questionable components.

Suess says it is important to understand the hazards of changing lamps in the older-style strings of lights.

"EACH OF THESE lamps receives the full voltage from the outlet (120 volts) and can create serious electrical safety problems," he asserts. "Never change lamps in these units with the power cord connected. This is particularly important when replacing outdoor lighting in the snow or rain."

Modern miniature lamps have several advantages over older types in that the former are more power efficient and operate at lower temperatures. The strings are series-wired so they have low voltage at each lamp. They also have a built-in shorting strip so that other lamps will remain lit when one burns out.

The voltage of each lamp is determined by the number of lamps in the string; that is, if the string has 10 lamps, the voltage of each lamp is 12 volts. If there are 30 lamps, the voltage of each is four (dividing 120 volts by the number of lamps per string).

Prompt replacement of the lamps is necessary for both safety and economy, Suess says. "Assuming that six lamps burn out in a 30-lamp string, the 24 remaining lamps each receives 5 volts instead of the four volts for which they were designed. This is a 25 percent overload. Lamps will burn out faster and operate at a high temperature, which could cause problems.

"LAMPS OF THE PROPER voltage must be used when replacing burned-out lamps," Suess points out. "Since there are no industrial standards for the newer lamps, it is often necessary to sacrifice one of the lighting sets for replacement bulbs."

The best time to consider replacements is at the time of original purchase, he says.

Real names not required

Angel of the year

J.C. Humphries (left) looks on as Donald E. Smallwood presents "Angel of the Year" award to Robert M. Packer, principal of Costa Mesa High School. He was honored for outstanding community contributions by the Harbor Key Club of the Child Guidance Center of Orange County.

Ann Landers

DEAR ANN LANDERS: Will you please make it clear whether or not people who write to you have to sign their real names? My friends and I have gotten into quite an argument over this.

What confuses me is when someone writes in and says, "Please don't use my right name." Does this mean the person DID use his right name?

I don't recall seeing any names in your column except those of experts. Thanks for clarifying this. — CONNIE IN LYNDURST, VA.

DEAR CONNIE: Some people do sign their right names, but it is not mandatory. I will print a letter with or without a signature if I feel it is legitimate. Most people who write about personal problems ask me not to use their real names, and I respect their wishes, of course.

Strangely enough, some folks who write about intimate problems say, "I don't care if you use my right name — everybody in town knows about this already." In such cases, I choose not to use the real name because it might prove embarrassing to the family.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: Thanks for standing your ground regarding daughters who resent driving their mothers around. May I add something?

My mother is a complainer. She can find something to criticize no matter how perfect it may appear to others. I get fed up listening to her, but I would never let her know. I realize she is only human and that she is a product of her mother and her mother's mother.

She made some mistakes in bringing me up, but she did her best — as I am doing my best with my children. I know, too, that I will not do a perfect job — and I hope they will understand.

So, I drive my mother around and do chores for her and listen to her complain. But I don't mind, because she is — well, she is my mother. She gave me life. She raised me and put herself out for me plenty. Now it is my turn.

I know this letter isn't good enough to print, but I have to let you know I am behind you all the way. — A LOVING DAUGHTER IN CHICAGO

DEAR LOVING: Countless daughters could take lessons from you. Thanks for writing.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I hate school and am not learning a darned thing. It's just plain boring. In this state a kid can quit when he is 16. My 16th birthday will be in June, and that's what I want to do.

The homework assignments take so much time a guy can't look at TV or see his girl or do any of the things kids are supposed to do when they are young. Everybody has to take a foreign language to graduate — so I chose Spanish. I don't want to go to Spain, and it's a pain in the neck to memorize all those words. It will never help me earn a living, and neither will Shakespeare. Actually, I like manual labor better than books.

I promised my dad I would write to you, but I didn't promise I would take your advice. Thank you for reading this letter and please excuse the misspelled words. I can't find the dictionary. — PETE IN BISMARCK, N.D.

DEAR PETE: Hang in there and get your diploma. If you think you are bored now, just wait till you are stuck in a job at the bottom of the pay scale. After high school, go to a trade school and learn a skill. You will never regret it.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I am writing my husband this anonymous letter through you, since there is no other way to tell him.

Last week my husband's best friend asked me to have an affair. I turned him down without a moment's hesitation. I know too well how affairs can tear families apart, and I love mine too dearly to risk hurting them just to add a little excitement to my life.

The strange thing is that my husband will never know. Some wives remain faithful because they never have had an appealing offer to do otherwise, and I must admit it was good for my ego to be propositioned. I now know for certain that I am a "tested" marketable item, but I would rather go to bed with my husband than with anyone else in the world.

Last week I gave him the supreme compliment of choosing him as the favorite man in my life. I wish he could know it, but he never will. — ONE LESS SCANDAL

DEAR ONE LESS: I am not printing the name of your city. Let every husband who reads this column wonder if the women who wrote that flattering letter was his wife.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I have learned a lot from your column, but at times you tend to be one-sided. For example: Frequently you ask parents, "How long has it been since you have said to your teen-ager, 'I love you! You are a joy to me. I'm glad you're mine'?"

You have often bemoaned the fact that it is the rare child who appreciates parents until he or she becomes a parent. Perhaps this is true, but it would sure be music to the ears of parents, if, for no particular reason, their teen-ager would say, "You're really super. . .I love you a lot." — A MOTHER WHO HASN'T HEARD IT YET

DEAR MOTHER: Here's your letter — and it's a good one. I hope you and thousands of other parents hear it tonight.

Horoscope

FRIDAY, DEC. 19
By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (Mar. 21-Apr. 19): Change of scenery would be beneficial. Perceive motive, deal with member of opposite sex who exercises a "claim."

TAURUS (Apr. 20-May 20): Emphasis on costs, improvements, plans, remodeling in connection with living quarters. Money and how to get more of it could be central theme of your scenario.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): What seems a setback will boomerang in your favor. Delay is proverbial blessing in disguise.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Light is shed on areas which had been filled with doubts, fears. Inaugurate policy of greater independence.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Aura of romance prevails. Creative talents find outlet. Focus on friends, hopes, wishes, results of recent business investment.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Contact is made with one who can be instrumental in building career, obtaining basic goals. Strive for originality, independence and an outlet for creative capabilities.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Follow through on hunch. Intuitive intellect serves as reliable guide. Focus on education, travel, long-distance communications.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Put halt to personal inflationary spiral. Be selective, accept social invitation, display humor, versatility and sense of fitness.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): If thorough, you succeed. Be aware of public relations, legal rights and permissions.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): One who shares basic interests makes special request. Be receptive, but analyze motives.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Doors which previously were closed will now be opened — know it and step forward with confidence.

PISCES (Feb. 19-Mar. 20): Focus on values, perception, ability to know when something of importance is to occur. Your extrasensory perception works overtime.

Going in style

Kurt Ashley Groeters, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wolfgang Groeters of Santa Ana, models a red Christmas stocking for Jacquie Miller, president of Hoag Memorial Hospital's Auxiliary. For the past 28 years, babies born at the hospital the week before Christmas have been sent home in stockings made by the Santa Ana chapter.

...Grandma's lights

This insures proper match between lights and replacements.

"Frayed tempers can be as common as frayed extension cords during the holiday season," Suess says. "It is amazing how many homes have $50 holiday lighting connected with 98-cent cords."

He urges the selection of proper extension cords for both economy and safety, adding that inspection for bare wires and loose connections "should be an annual ritual." the potential cost in human terms of makeshift power cords is great, he adds.

"IF YOU ARE USING an extension cord to connect the holiday lighting similar to the cord on one of your lamps, you are using a cord that is hopelessly underrated for the job it has to do," Suess declares.

This type of cord is designed to light a single lamp, not several strings of lights. Purchase extension cords tailored to lighting needs in terms of both wire size and length, he advises. Wire is sized by gauge, the smaller the number, the bigger the wire. Lamp cord is 18 gauge, so a minimum of 16-gauge wire should be used for extension cords, slightly longer than necessary.

"If you are handy and construct your own custom cord lengths, be sure to purchase heavy-duty plugs and sockets," Suess urges.

OUTDOOR WIRING should use outdoor-rated cords with factory-installed connectors to provide maximum weather protection, he points out. Increase the weather protection by taping the extension cord to the tree or post with a cloth strip (never a wire) so that the plug end of the cord is facing downward to prevent water or snow-melt from collecting.

"Connecting holiday lighting can be simple and safe if you use common sense," Suess says. "Avoid the temptation to plug and unplug the cord at the decoration. Do all the connecting and disconnecting away from the decorating."

The easiest way to do this is to connect the cord to a switched outlet. Outdoor wiring can also be switched in this manner by screwing in an adaptor in an outdoor-lighting fixture. The unit can be safely turned off and on from the comfort of the house.

"Regardless of how you connect your decorations, always make the last connection at the wall outlet," Suess urges. "Avoid the temptation to connect the cord to the outlet and then make a connection elsewhere. This causes you to hold a cord in each hand, potentially becoming part of the circuit."

Radiology unit

Hospital dedication

By MARY JANE SCARCELLO
Of the Daily Pilot Staff

Family and friends gathered last week at Hoag Memorial Hospital to dedicate the Willard D. Voit Memorial Radiology Department and tour the facility.

After the ceremony and tours, guests went to the Newport Harbor Yacht Club for a cocktail reception.

Mary Jo Voit, whose late husband the unit is named after, was joined by family members Willard S. Voit, Robert Voit and Mr. and Mrs. Richard Voit.

Also attending were Orange County Sheriff and Mrs. Brad Gates, John and Mary Schmitz, Mr. and Mrs. Val Detling, Assemblyman Bruce Nestande, Al Auer, Mr. and Mrs. Omer Long, Mr. and Mrs. George Hoag II and Senator Dennis Carpenter.

Others at the reception were Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hixson, Jr., Dr. and Mrs. Richard Harano, Gary Burrill, Mr. and Mrs. Brian Zenz, Mr. and Mrs. John Porter and Mr. and Mrs. James F. Penney.

Happenings

The City of Irvine welcomed its first savings and loan with an open house in the Heritage Shopping Plaza.

Guests gathered at Citizens Thrift and Loan to enjoy hors d'oeuvres catered by Gloria Clay of Marina del Rey and see the watercolors on exhibit from the collection of E. Gene Crain.

Greeting visitors were James Capretz, of Newport Beach, chairman of the board of directors, Peter Marr, also of Newport Beach, vice chairman of the board and Dr. James Rich, secretary-treasurer.

Irvine Mayor Art Anthony and City Manager Bill Woollett attended, as did Michael and Carolyn McGuire (he's president of Citizens), Dr. David Kagnoff, Barry Williams, Pat Schneider and Richard Callaghan.

Hosting 250 guests for dinner is no snap, but Susan and Dr. David Kagnoff carried it off well last weekend.

Tents with heaters expanded their top-of-the-hill Spyglass home, and Hemingway's brought the banquet.

Diners in semi-formal attire enjoyed hot and cold hors d'oeuvres, a seafood bar, medallions of veal or stuffed salmon, with pastries and Christmas cookies for desert.

Enjoying the view from the bigtop were Mr. and Mrs. Richard Hausman, Dr. and Mrs. Gerard Bastiaanse, Mr. and Mrs. Ygal Sonenshine, Dr. and Mrs. J.K. Chonz and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Briggs.

Also attending were Dr. and Mrs. Michael Bear, Dr. and Mrs. Martin Kagnoff, Dr. and Mrs. Royal Tucker and Dr. and Mrs. Richard Foxx.

June and Jack Blackburn of Monarch Bay were honored with a surprise party recently on their 40th wedding anniversary.

The party was hosted by their children Mr. and Mrs. William Blackburn of Laguna Beach, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Blackburn of Carlsbad, Mr. and Mrs. James Blackburn of Del Mar, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Blackburn of Sun Valley, Idaho, and Mr. and Mrs. Ken Brokaw of Laguna Hills.

The Blackburns were married in Los Angeles, and moved to Orange County six years ago.

In addition to their five children, the Blackburns have nine grandchildren.

Man's home given back after battle

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Salvatore Veneziale has his $60,000 home back, two years after it was sold for $435 when Veneziale refused to pay a $12.40 tax bill for a garage he built.

"I don't think in this country people like me or anyone else should be treated this way," said Veneziale. Bucks County Common Pleas Judge Kenneth G. Biehn overturned the 1978 tax sale. "Thank God the judge went my way.

"I FEEL HAPPY in one way, but I had to go through a lot of expense for no reason," Veneziale said in a telephone interview.

Noting that the county tax bureau properly informed Veneziale, Biehn said he thought the 39-year-old Italian immigrant, who came to this country in 1960 and now owns a successful pizzeria, acted "foolishly and stubbornly.

"But it did shock the conscience of the court that Mr. and Mrs. Veneziale, or anyone, could lose their residence for failure to pay $12.40, an interim assessment for a garage," Biehn said in a telephone interview.

THE JUDGE, in his ruling, ordered Veneziale to pay Area Homes Inc., the corporation that bought his house, the $435.60 it paid, court costs and legal fees.

"Area Homes did legitimately pay for the property. It certainly is an innocent party," said Biehn.

Area Homes attorney Heywood E. Becker said he thought the judge's ruling was unprecedented and was considering an appeal.

"HE, VENEZIALE, was just a stubborn guy. He didn't want to pay it (the tax bill)," Becker said.

Women seeking out action

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Capt. Maria Higgins, taking over at the Navy command that trains 32,000 sailors annually, says women someday will be at the forefront of duty in and out of war.

"In the future, I see women serving aboard all the ships of the Navy," she said in an interview before today's change-of-command ceremony.

"They want to drive the ships and they aspire to become chief of naval operations."

Capt. Higgins, conceding she "may be a little liberal in my thinking in this regard," noted that women are graduating from surface warfare schools and others are in the Naval Academy.

No underwear scenes for Matthau now

By BOB THOMAS

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Walter Matthau wonders aloud if his next film will evoke this complaint: "After working hard all day, we expect to see you in a Walter Matthau movie."

MATTHAU

"First Monday in October" is not "a Walter Matthau movie." He does not get caught wearing his underwear in public. He is no oddly coupled Oscar Madison. In point of fact, he plays an associate justice of the United States Supreme Court.

He explains, somewhat defensively: "I am just foolish and arrogant to think of myself as an actor. Is it so strange for me to be playing a judge? I've known a lot of judges who look and talk dumber than I do. Just think of what being a judge entails: setting youself up as judge of your fellow man. That to me is the epitome of arrogance."

I found Matthau dressed in his judicial robes on Paramount's Stage 31 and 32, which have been converted into a detailed replica of the interior of the U.S. Supreme Court. Ronald Neame was directing a scene in which the court was posing for its annual photograph.

INCLUDED IN THE portrait was Associate Justice Jill Clayburgh. She is the Orange County conservative who clashes ideologically with Matthau, a dissenter obviously patterned after the late William O. Douglas.

"First Monday in October" (when the Supreme Court convenes) is based on the Jerome Lawrence-Robert E. Lee play that scored on Broadway with Henry Fonda and Jane Alexander as the judicial protagonist. Matthau saw the play in New York after being advised by one of his William Morris agents that it might be a movie for him.

"Hank would have done the movie except that he was committed to another project ('On Golden Pond') with his daughter Jane," said Matthau. "I went to Hank's house to talk to him about it, and he said, 'I asked them who was doing it and when they said it was you, I said OK.'"

MATTHAU DID A MODICUM of research, reading the autobiographical books as well as the recent biography of Dougas. The actor and other members of the film company lunched with Chief Justice Warren Burger during the recent locations in Washington. "He told us he liked the play very much, saw it two or three times," Matthau reported.

During the first two weeks of rehearsals, Matthau admitted that he found himself imitating Fonda; he soon gave that up because "I'm not a good mimic." As for Clayburgh, he is amazed.

"She knows how to act for the camera better than all of us," he remarked. "I'm still doing what I learned from my stage work. She knows instinctively what to do."

IN THE THEATER, "First Monday in October" was an intellectual contest between a liberal who believes that freedom of expression should be accorded even to makers of a pornographic film and a conservative who felt that moral standards should be upheld. The duel remains, but Matthau indicated something new has been added.

"We are trying to get more of the feeling of 'The Brethren' (the recent bestseller by Bob Woodward and Scott Armstrong about the inner workings and conflicts of the Court). We want to make the justices more human. For instance, all of the justices shake hands with each other before entering the court. One of the justices is a Negro, and I don't shake hands with him: I give him this." He indicated a soul-brother salute.

The play seemed somewhat futuristic by portraying a woman justice. That doesn't seem so now — after Ronald Reagan's campaign suggestion that he would appoint a woman to the court.

"I hope he holds off until our movie comes out," said Matthau.

Back to movies

Kim Novak, returning to the screen for the first time in six years, arrives at New York's Ziegfeld Theater with her husband, veterinarian Robert Malloy, for the premiere of her new movie, "The Mirror Crack'd."

Finally, star in Philly

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Movie idol John Barrymore always wanted to be buried in Philadelphia.

His son, John Drew Barrymore, 49, flew here last week with a small urn containing his father's ashes and buried the urn in the family cemetery.

Barrymore's body was cremated after it was removed earlier this month from the Calvary Cemetery in Los Angeles.

"This family (the Barrymores) goes back for 11 generations of actors, mostly in the city of Philadelphia, and there is a very strong reason for him to want to be buried in Philadelphia — that's where we was from," said Bruce Pedy, a Beverly Hills attorney who represents the Barrymores.

Plate of the Day

CHAOS Donald Gervais insists it's not his outlook on the world condition. He admits tongue in cheek, that it reflects his friends comments on his driving habits.

Information for the "Plate of the Day" is supplied by Motor Car Co., author of the 1979 edition of the "Who's Who" of Personalized California License Plates.

$1 million settlement

Air conditioning firm to pay penalties

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) The Trane Co., a major manufacturer of home air conditioning units, has agreed to pay more than $1 million in a settlement of a consumer protection lawsuit which attacked the company's credit sales policies.

Attorney General George Deukmejian said the state and company reached a settlement in the case Wednesday.

Trane, without admitting wrongdoing, agreed to pay $750,000 to the state over a five-year period to offset costs of future investigations and legal fees against persons or companies which violate laws relating to the sale of home improvements.

TRANE ALSO WILL pay $200,000 in civil penalties to the state and Alameda County and $45,000 in investigative costs to the Contractors' State License Board for its probe which led to the filing of the lawsuit. Additionally, Trane will pay $5,000 in investigative costs to the Los Angeles county Consumer Affairs Department.

Trane, with headquarters in La Crosse, Wis., agreed it would eliminate certain previous credit sales practices and take steps to benefit past and present customers.

The company also agreed to warn its customers in large red letters of a sales contract provision which may require the consumer financing a Trane product to put up their house for security. The provision gives Trane the right to sell the consumers' house if default is made on the financing of a Trane product.

IN WHAT DEUKMEJIAN said is an unprecedented move, Trane also agreed to establish a policy of selling air conditioning equipment only to credit-worthy people. Trane agreed to restrict sales to persons having an apparent inability to meet monthly payments.

Deukmejian expressed hope the credit sales policies agreed to by Trane would be adopted by other firms and thus substantially lessen the possibility that purchasers of home improvements would lose the equity in their homes by failing to make timely payments.

Under the settlement, Trane also agreed that all of its 1979 and 1980 air conditioning customers with a gross family income of less than $16,000 will not have liens placed on their homes if finance payments are missed. The same protection applies to 1977 and 1978 customers with less than $15,000 income and for 1976 customers with less than $14,000 income.

Hospital lists staff

The medical staff at San Clemente General Hospital has elected Dr. Herman Sobol as chief of staff.

Other officers elected to the medical board include Dr. Emilie S. Loeffler, vice president, and Dr. Gary D. Ketron, secretary-treasurer.

Also elected as members-at-large were Drs. Robert Wax, Terrence Schuhrke, Thomas Acomb and T.P. Fong.

Killing self

Hubby won't guard health

By DR. PETER STEINCROHN

Dear Dr. Steincrohn: My husband is the victim of "won't power." He has tremendous willpower in business, but has none left in caring for his health. He is the typical success in business, and a failure in trying to stay alive.

Let me be specific. My husband is a very successful businessman at 43. He owns his growing business. We have two homes, three cars and all the luxuries a husband, wife and three children ever dreamed of.

HE TRIES TO BE A GOOD husband and father, too. But as you've said in your column, some people go about killing themselves conciously or unconsciously.

My husband knows he has a blood pressure over 200. His electrocardiograms show that he had a silent coronary attack recently. He has sugar in his urine.

Our doctor warns him that he needs effective treatment for his hypertension, heart and diabetes. Cooperation is essential. At first my husband tried.

DOCTOR IN THE HOUSE

Within weeks he has stopped his high blood pressure medicine and insulin. He stays at least 35 pounds overweight. He smokes "only" a pack a day now. He still drinks too much for his own good.

OUR DOCTOR AGREES HE'S committing suicide. When I watch him day to day, I think of the moth drawn to the flame. I should be practicing to be a widow.

Is there any medicine, Dr. Steincrohn, that will convert my husband's "won't power" to "will power?" I'm being serious, not cute. I'm awfully scared. — Mrs. F.

Dear Mrs. F: And I'm not being cute when I say that your husband is the typical example of a "successful failure." I wish I knew of some vaccine that might help him try to save himself.

Meanwhile, all you and your doctor can do is keep working on him, hoping he'll change. Sometimes, only a sudden heart attack will quickly change a man's philosophy, Mrs. F. Let's hope he doesn't need a drastic lesson to learn how to transform won't power to will power.

* * *

MEDICALETTES:

Dear Dr. Steincrohn: My huband and I have decided to go on vegetarian diets. But the complication is that we have two small children. We're concerned that such a diet may harm them. Is this true? — Mrs. K.

Dear Mrs. K: As the saying goes, "it all depends." If you're planning on a "pure" vegetarian diet for the entire family, you may be harming your children. According to Drs. William C. MacLean, Jr. and George G. Graham of Baltimore: "Adequate growth in pure vegetarian children is more difficult to achieve."

For the sake of the children you should be on a lactovegetarian (drink milk) or lactoovovegetarian (eats eggs and drinks milk) diet. Also add adequate supplementary iron and vitamins.

* * *

For Mrs. B: Examples of carminatives are oils of peppermint, spearmint, garlic and onion. These may account for some stubborn cases of heartburn.

I've known some patients who had heartburn after taking peppermint candies after meals. It's possible that peppermint may be the cause of your trouble, Mrs. B.

Remember, your heart is in your own hands, so take care of it and make it a part of your living philsophy, advises Dr. Steincrohn in his booklet, "22 ways to Prevent and Treat Coronary Disease." For a copy write to him at Box 1560, Costa Mesa, 93626, enclosing 50 cents and a self-addressed, stamped envelope.

PAINTING STOLEN

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Officials at the Wadsworth Atheneum say thieves made off with a small oil painting by the 18th century French landscape artist Charles F. Lacroix.

The painting had been pried from its frame. Entitled "Seascape with Ruined Arch," it depicts six fisherman working in a rocky harbor framed on one side by an arch.

Noseprinting tested on cattle

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — South African cattle ranchers may be counting noses more closely than ever if a police experiment works out.

Police are testing whether cattle can be identified by noseprints just as people can be identified by fingerprints.

Police Capt. Phillipus Putter said, "We use simple stamp-pad ink for taking noseprints because normal fingerprint ink proved too oily and smudgy for cattle."

The experiments have been going on for three months, with police fingerprint experts taking the nose skins of slaughtered cattle to police headquarters to make prints.

Soldier denied doctor?

Death aboard ship probed

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The Marine Corps says an investigation has been ordered into the death of a corporal from Bismarck, N.D., who spent a week aboard ship with high fever, nausea and vomiting.

At the time, Cpl. James Olson was returning with other Marines from the Indian Ocean. He died Nov. 9.

The tank landing ship Frederick was in a seven-ship task force. There was a medical doctor on the New Orleans, like the Frederick a San Diego-based amphibious ship, but only enlisted corpsmen were reported handling medical problems on the other warships.

The San Diego Union quoted an unidentified crewman as saying a medical corpsman's request for a doctor to treat Olson was ignored. Navy and Marine spokesmen denied such a request was made. Meanwhile, Olson's fever hovered around 103 and 104 for a week.

Malaria was listed as a possible cause of his death. His battalion landing team was returning to Hawaii from the Philippines as well as the Indian Ocean, both sources of malaria.

Marine spokesmen said no decision had been reached about the cause of Olson's death and whether he was given proper care.

"We are aware of the gravity of the situation," a Marine spokesman in Hawaii said.

Seller supreme

Colonel had world stage

EDITOR'S NOTE — In his travels as a bureau chief and sports editor, Wick Temple often ran into a white-haired man in a white suit on the road to sell fried chicken. That man, Col. Harland Sanders, died Tuesday. Temple, now the AP's managing editor, recalls what Sanders meant to those who met him.

By WICK TEMPLE
AP Managing Editor

NEW YORK — The Kentucky Fried Chicken man died and with him went a bit of Americana.

Col. Harland Sanders, the man with the white hair, the white goatee, the white plantation suit and the black string tie, had spread to the corners of the world an American southern delicacy — the fried chicken that graces every table on the genteel side of the Mason-Dixon line.

From a small Kentucky shop, the colonel (whose title was only honorary) built an empire that stretched to 48 countries. On streets occupied by culinary palaces in London and Paris, Sanders and his chicken-pushing heirs established their turf under 6,000 of those familiar red-and- white signs.

FAST FOOD, JUNK food, call it what you will: Kentucky Fried Chicken became a household word because it has a particular seasoning and crispness born in the farm kitchens of the South. Its success was due, though, as much to the colonel's merchandising acumen as to its quality.

SANDERS

In an earlier day, Harland Sanders might have ridden a covered wagon from town to town, using his showmanship to sell all manner of goods to a naive American public.

But in latter-day America, his show-biz style had to be combined with a quality household product to give the more sophisticated consumer something besides razzmatazz.

CHILDREN FLOCKED TO him for autographs as he meandered through airports. Even after he sold his empire for $2 million to John Y. Brown, now the governor of Kentucky, Sanders' picture remained on the cardboard boxes and barrels in which his chicken was sold. He was as recognizable as John Wayne, almost in the same league as Santa Claus.

Even after Brown resold the business to a Connecticut firm, Sanders remained as its symbol and emissary, collecting a salary of $250,000 a year for his meanderings.

There is practically no escaping the spread of his empire. Once on a tour of the village of Kotzebue, Alaska, this correspondent discovered a life-sized plywood figure of the colonel outside a shack in which fried chicken was being sold to Eskimos.

He dropped out of a one-room schoolhouse in the sixth grade, yet he held six honorary doctorates. He was one of the good old boys who brought warmth to an America of three troubled decades.

AND ALL OF this was done after he got ambition at the age of 40 and added a fried chicken shop to his gas station. He didn't take his show on the road until he was 64, and he died at 90.

Sanders was a guest of honor anywhere he cared to be. He became a part of the American tableau of timeless characters, a Johnny Appleseed of fried chicken.

He enjoyed his travels and the people he met. Once he played nursemaid to an unruly youngster on an airplane flight and the stewardess said, "Thank you for helping me."

"I didn't do it for you. I did it for the child," the colonel replied.

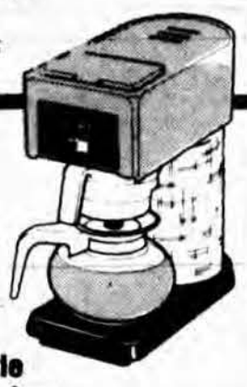

BUT IT WAS the bluegrass country of Kentucky that he loved, and to which he always returned. He had a favorite poem that he often quoted:

"When the last trumpet wakes the land and the sea
"And the tombs of the earth set the prisoners free,
"You may all go aloft if you choose, but for me.
"I think I'll just stay in Kentucky."

Unscheduled stop

Passengers leave bus after it lost wheels on Beach Boulevard near Huntington Intercommunity Hospital about 3:30 p.m. Wednesday. Senior citizens from Pasadena were aboard bus when mishap occurred. They were on their way to Huntington Harbour Cruise of Lights. No one was hurt. Bus company sent another bus and the Pasadena seniors continued on their way. Apparently, lug nuts sheared off and two wheels on right rear side of bus fell off. One rolled 300 yards down Beach Boulevard.

State employees win back salary

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The state Supreme Court gave 220,000 state workers $207 million in retroactive pay today.

The $207 million had been approved by the Legislature in 1979 over Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr.'s veto. The lawmakers gave the workers a 7 percent pay raise retroactive to Oct. 8, 1973 from June 30, 1979. The average raise was about $500 per worker.

Brown and the Legislature had frozen state salaries for a year after passage of the Proposition 13 tax-slashing initiative in June 1978.

Tax revolt leader Howard Jarvis and Armij Brodty, a Marin County real estate agent, filed a lawsuit to block the retroactive pay increase, the first for state employees in two years.

A court of Appeal in Sacramento held that the pay boost was illegal because it was retroactive. State employees then carried the case to the Supreme Court on appeal.

The state constitution bans extra compensation for services which have already been paid for. Legislative authors of the pay raise bill sought to get around that constitutional provision by declaring that the $207 million was for continuing services.

The Supreme Court, in a 5-2 decision by Justice Stanley Mosk, said "the extra compensation clause is not offended when state employees receive retroactive salary adjustments for periods during which they work with justifiable uncertainty regarding their salary levels.

"Since we are persuaded in this case that the uncertainty was justified, we do not hesitate to uphold the Legislature's overwhelming decision to make such retroactive adjustments.

Keith Hearn, a spokesman for the California State Employees Association, heralded the decision.

"It's been a long time coming — 18 months. We're elated. It adds a little bit of sparkle to the holidays for a quarter-million people," he said.

Few Bangkok flu cases in county

Although a new strain of influenza has started to spread in Los Angeles County, only a few possible cases of the disease have been reported in Orange County, health officials say. (Related story Page A5).

In fact, the so-called Bangkok Flu hasn't had the effect that a still undiagnosed gastrointestinal bug has had, forcing some Orange County residents to miss a few days of work or school.

"The Bangkok Flu is a strain of influenza-A and was first diagnosed in 1979. Officials in Los Angeles County report cases of the flu in all parts of their area.

In Orange County, however, only two cases of influenza-A have been reported — in a convalescent home in Laguna Hills. Tom Prendergast, epidemiologist for the county Public Health Department, said the exact strain wasn't isolated, so officials aren't sure whether it was the Bangkok variety.

No large outbreaks of flu have been reported at local schools, said Barbara Peck, supervising public health nurse for the county.

She said a less-severe gastrointestinal disease is making the rounds of county residents, although doctors haven't confirmed that a viral infection is responsible.

So far, the changing seasons haven't brought abnormal outbreaks of illness to Orange County, said Prendergast, although he said more incidences of sickness are predictable in colder weather.

He said the county may not be hit with the Bangkok flu simply because Los Angeles County has been beset with the strain.

"We've had plenty of opportunity to import it from all over the world," he noted.

Officials say the Bangkok Flu can last for up to two weeks and includes severe symptoms, including high fever, sore throat and aches.

Hostages released by yule?

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Prime Minister Mohammad Ali Rajai said today the United States can win release of the 52 American hostages before the Christmas holidays if Washington "can give the necessary guarantees," the official Iranian news agency reported.

Rajai apparently referred to Iran's new message, which he said outlined "financial guarantees" needed from the United States to clear the way for release of the hostages who spent their 411th day in captivity today.

A spokesman for Rajai's office said the Iranian reply has been prepared for relay to the United States by Algerian intermediaries, but that he could not confirm that the message had been given to an Algerian delegation waiting in Tehran.

A report from Tehran by the American CBS network said that Rajai handed the Algerian diplomats a briefcase today, presumably containing the response Washington was waiting to receive.

But the spokesman, reached by telephone from Beirut, said he was unaware of Rajai handing over any answer to the Algerians. The spokesman identified himself as Mr. Sadeghi of the prime minister's public relations office.

Tuesday, Rajai termed the message Iran's "final reply" and indicated U.S. financial guarantees were needed to meet Iranian conditions for release of the hostages. But he has never spelled out exactly what guarantees Iran seeks and Washington officials were waiting to see if Iran's latest position indicates a softening of the original conditions set by the Iranian government.

Among its conditions, Iran is demanding return to Iran of the wealth of the late shah and his family and cancellation of all legal claims against Iran pending in U.S. courts. The Carter administration has said the United States government cannot legally fulfill the conditions.

Valley board plans closing of 2nd school

The advisory committee that already has targeted Wardlow School for closure has named a second Fountain Valley School District facility for closure in June.

By a vote of nine in favor and two abstentions, the district's Advisory Committee on School Closures and Disposition of Surplus Property agreed Tuesday that Bushard School, 19699 Education Lane, should be closed.

The committee recommended that Bushard students be merged into Oka School, located on the same campus.

The district suspended classes in half of Bushard during 1979. The facility currently houses only grades six through eight, operating as the district's only middle school.

The committee will conduct three public hearings in the Wardlow and Bushard communities before making its final recommendations to the board of trustees in late January or early February.

The final decision on school closures must be made by the trustees.

A hearing for the Wardlow community will be held at 7:30 tonight at the school, 9191

Did Alaia mind go blank?

By DAVID KUTZMANN
Of the Daily Pilot Staff

A Newport Beach psychiatrist who saw Dr. Louis Alaia as a patient says the murder defendant has no recollection of stabbing his former wife and her attorney in the woman's Huntington Harbour home last June 13.

Testifying for the defense, Dr. David Sheffner said Alaia, 50, had told him he simply doesn't remember what happened at the time of the killings.

Previous testimony has indicated that the Huntington Harbour surgeon had gone to his ex-wife's home that night to discuss weekend custody rights of his two young children.

Sheffner said Alaia told him he can recall entering the home, having a short discussion with his former wife, Margy Lou Alaia, and then being ordered to leave the house or the police would be called.

It is at this point, the psychiatrist previously testified, that his client's memory grows fuzzy. He can remember seeing a shining light, Sheffner said, but then his memory goes blank until he is next standing in the kitchen, where his ex-wife and Long Beach attorney Marvin Tincher lay with fatal knife wounds.

Alaia has pleaded innocent and innocent by reason of insanity to the dual murder charges against him.

Sheffner, testifying for a second day in Orange County Superior Court Judge Byron McMillan's courtroom, said Alaia was in an "altered state of consciousness" at the time of the slayings. He said the defendant, who again wept profusely Wednesday, was simply not conscious of what he was doing.

The witness said the surgeon's actions reflected a "breakthrough of primitive, explosive forces in his personality," uncharacteristic behavior for the doctor.

Defense attorneys contend that Alaia was temporarily insane at the time of the stabbings due to both extreme physical and emotional stresses.

They said this included his affliction with the disease called narcolepsy, or an uncontrollable

Proposals revised

Valley cops said near wage pact

Revised contract proposals presented Wednesday by Fountain Valley police and city negotiators have brought the two sides "very close" to a settlement, spokesmen for both sides said today.

Negotiations had been stalled for several weeks as police held out for a 34.1 percent one-year salary and benefit increase, while the city has proposed one-year increases ranging only to 17.9 percent.

The revised proposals discussed Wednesday were aimed at bringing local officers' compensation into line with neighboring departments over a two-year period.

"I think we're very close to a contract," said Sgt. Ron Manda, negotiating chairman for the department's 58 sworn officers. "But a few basic things are holding us up."

He said the major sticking point involves insurance payments.

"We are closer now (to a settlement) than we've ever been," said personnel director Bill Ackerman, who is negotiating on behalf of the city.

He said his team will take the latest police offer to the City Council at a closed door session tonight.

If the proposal is accepted by the council, the pact would be presented to the entire police association for a vote within the next few days.

Neither side would release specific figures on the latest proposals.

But Ackerman said that after Tuesday night's council meeting, which included lengthy public testimony in support of police, city negotiators were instructed to aim for parity with neighboring police departments over a two-year period.

This means officers would be brought to the compensation levels of their counterparts in Costa Mesa, Huntington Beach, Westminster, Santa Ana and Garden Grove.

The most recent two-year proposal discussed publicly by police included pay and benefit increases amounting to 20 percent immediately, an additional 13 percent in one year and 5 percent more in 18 months.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — What if you held a press conference and nobody came?

That's what happened to John Zrinyi, a police officer who held a press conference Wednesday to announce his candidacy for mayor.

HB high rise vote in error

An article in the Daily Pilot incorrectly listed the vote by the Huntington Beach City Council that set a six-story limit on downtown high-rise buildings.

Those voting in favor of the limitation Monday were Mayor Ruth Bailey, Don MacAllister, Bob Mandic and John Thomas.

Those opposed were Ron Pattinson, Jack Kelly and Ruth Finley.

Mrs. Finley said she voted against the measure because she favored a three-story limit. Pattinson and Kelly had opposed height limit designations.

The Daily Pilot regrets the error.

No cheer for teachers

Salary war escalates in HB District

Season's greetings from teachers of the Huntington Beach Union High School District this year are not full of good cheer.

In fact, the 15,000 green card-like mailers are another device being used in the contract standoff between the teachers and the district.

A drawing on the inside of the 8½-inch by 5½-inch mailer depicts an empty and tattered stocking hanging over a fireplace labeled "Teachers and Students."

Hanging next to the empty stocking is a completely full one labeled "Administration and Things."

Santa Claus is shown puzzled, holding a bag labeled "Ye Olde Budget." The point of the card, says David Chapel, president of the district Educators Association, is that the administration's budget is too expansive while the contract offer to the teachers is too meager.

The association, which represents 800 teachers, is trying to get community support for the contract request of a 14 percent raise this year and ceiling of 34 students in academic classes, Chapel said.

The district has offered a 16 percent raise over two years, and a limit of 170 students spread over five classes a day.

The district currently is studying a list of proposed budget shifts, proposed by the association. The teachers proposed that more than $1 million should be cut from the administration budget and applied to teachers' salaries.

But district Trustee Zita Wessa said today the proposed shifts are unreasonable. She said the teachers propose cutting costs that are mandated by the state. She said teachers also want to eliminate data processing, a computer function, which sends home student report cards.

Arabian says Soviets' target is oil fields

CANBERRA, Australia (AP) — Saudia Arabia's oil minister, Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani, declared today that the Soviet Union's target is the Middle East oil fields.

Yamani told the National Press Club that Soviet military involvement in the Horn of Africa, Afghanistan and South Yemen, showed what the Kremlin goal was.

"Their target is the oil fields," because sooner or later they will need the oil for themselves and for their satellites," he said.

Thatcher urges end to fast by Irish

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher today urged convicted Irish fasters to give up their 53-day-old hunger strike as one of them was reported near death.

The statement came shortly after the government's Northern Ireland Office said that the condition of seven of the hunger strikers was deteriorating.

HB raid

Trio arrested in drugs seizure

Armed with a search warrant, Huntington Beach police arrested three people and seized illegal drugs believed to be worth $30,000 at a local apartment Tuesday night.

One of the suspects, Lois Raye Conger, 31, was identified as a school bus driver for the Huntington Beach Union High School District.

District officials said today that under State Education Code provisions, Mrs. Conger will be suspended while the case proceeds through the courts.

Also arrested in the drug raid were the woman's husband, Robert Henry Conger, 33, an unemployed laborer, and her brother-in-law, Thomas Richard Conger, 26, a transport driver for the Los Angeles Times.

Lt. Bruce Young said officers entered Apartment 1 at 711 Owen St., at 9:30 p.m. Tuesday, based on one week's investigation under the direction of Sgt. Carl Vidano.

Inside, officers confiscated a quantity of drugs believed to include four ounces of cocaine, two pounds of marijuana, some hallucinogenic mushrooms and amphetamines, Young said.

The three suspects were arrested at the scene and jailed on suspicion of possession of illegal drugs for sale. All three were freed after posting $10,000 bail each.

Two captured on drug rap in Costa Mesa

Costa Mesa undercover officers arrested two men on suspicion of selling cocaine Wednesday when they reportedly concluded a "buy" for $9,000 worth of the drug in Westminster.

Working with Westminster and Irvine police, the Mesa officers allegedly purchased four ounces of cocaine from Luis Laruy, 44, of Stanton and Ismael Tablada, 30, of Cypress.

Sgt. Jim Watson of Costa Mesa's vice detail said officers worked three days setting up the buy in cooperation with Irvine police who had worked with an informant.

The purchase, he said, was made at a used car agency in Westminster.

Auto kills man headed for hospital

An Anaheim man was killed Wednesday as he walked across a street in Garden Grove on his way to a hospital.

C. Carl Allison, 76, was about to be admitted to the Palm Harbor Hospital when he was hit by a pickup truck on Palm Street south of Harbor Boulevard, said Garden Grove Police Lt. Stan Knee.

Allison had been told earlier in the day he needed treatment for a stomach disorder, Knee said. He had taken a bus home to tell his wife and had just stepped off a return bus and was crossing the street to the hospital when he was hit, he added.

Knee said Allison crossed in the middle of a block and not in a crosswalk. The driver of the truck, whose name was not released, was not cited.

Allison was carried to the hospital's emergency room but couldn't be saved, said the lieutenant.

Killing suspect nabbed

A suspect in the execution-style slaying of a young Burger King employee in Orange last week was in custody today at Orange County Jail and investigators said a second suspect is being sought.

Orange Police Detective John Webb said Orange and Ontario law enforcement officers took Dwayne McKinney, 20, of Los Angeles, into custody Wednesday night in Ontario.

McKinney was booked on suspicion of murder and robbery.

"At this point, this is a suspicion arrest," Webb said, explaining that investigators hope to develop more substantial information in the next day or so.

McKinney is suspected of being involved in the shooting death of Burger King employee Walter H. Bell II, 19, of Santa Ana, last Thursday night during a holdup of the fast food restaurant on W. Chapman Avenue.

Bell's death had been termed a "flat execution" by detectives because he had been shot for no apparent reason after opening a vault for the gunman, who had entered the business just before closing time. Other employees had been herded into a walk-in refrigerator.

Webb said the suspect matched the general description other restaurant employees gave of the assailant.

He added that he is working on any possible connection McKinney may have to the shooting death of three persons in a Bob's Big Boy restaurant in West Los Angeles last week.

Officers were put on McKinney's trail after the Ontario Police Department told Orange detectives they were investigating similar fast food restaurant robberies.

Webb said he followed through on leads from Ontario authorities and that information led to McKinney, who was arrested in his car Wednesday night as he was driving in Ontario. Officers said he offered no resistance.

No weapon was recovered, Webb said.

The investigator said it is believed the gunman had an accomplice and a second suspect is still being sought.

Dog saves six from fire, dies

MADERA (AP) — The barking of a family dog awakened six people and allowed them to escape their burning home here Wednesday, but the dog apparently died in the flames, officials said.

Benny Gallegos, 20, said he heard the dog barking shortly after midnight and opened a hallway separating the bedrooms from the rest of the home. He saw smoke and flames and closed the door again, then herded the rest of the family through a sliding door leading outside from the bedroom.

Inauguration band fund hits $20,000

Donations are pouring into Fountain Valley High School to finance a trip for the school's marching band to perform at Ronald Reagan's presidential inauguration Jan. 20 in Washington, D.C.

School officials say $20,000 has been received in the past week, bringing the travel fund to $30,000.

David Hagan, school principal, said the trip is estimated to cost $81,000 for the 134-member band and 16 adults.

The band is one of 20 school bands chosen by the inauguration committee from a list of 400 applicants nationwide.

School officials and band boosters started a mail campaign to Southern California businesses and corporations last week asking for donations.

The majority of the fund has been built from business donations ranging from $1,000 to $5,000. But school official Evelyn Belgen said the campus also has been flooded by smaller private donations, often accompanied by a note or Christmas card.

"It has really been heartwarming," Mrs. Belgen said. "Many of the notes are from people who used to play in school bands and say they never had such a great opportunity."

She said the donations have come from as far away as Santa Barbara and San Diego, indicating that many feel the band represents Southern California, not just Orange County.

Hagan said the president-elect's oldest daughter, Maureen Reagan, has volunteered to write letters of recommendation or to make personal appearances to help in the fund-raising effort.

Police plan display in HB

Law enforcement vehicles and public safety displays will be featured at a Huntington Beach Police Department exhibit at the Huntington Center shopping mall, 7777 Edinger Ave.

Officers will be stationed at the exhibit between 11 a.m. and 9 p.m., through Tuesday.

Literature on crime prevention and home security will be available, along with lock displays, emergency phone number stickers and information on the Neighborhood Watch program.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The use of decoys will be one method used by a special police task force formed to combat violent crime in Los Angeles' west side, police announced.

Council screen planned

Fountain Valley City Council members have agreed on a two-step interview process for screening applicants for the seat that will be vacated in January by Roger Stanton.

Mayor Al Hollinden said the remaining four council members will conduct brief public interviews with all residents who have submitted written applications for the post by Monday.

Afterward, the four council members each will select three names from the pool of applicants. Through this process, the council will attempt to narrow its choices to about five applicants, Hollinden said.

The council then will conduct in-depth public interviews with the finalists and make its appointment from this group.

The mayor said the council can take no formal action until Stanton officially resigns. He is expected to step down shortly before he is sworn in as a member of the Orange County Board of Supervisors on Jan. 6.

At that point, the remaining council members will have 30 days to appoint a successor to Stanton.

The interviews will be conducted in January, with the formal appointment possibly scheduled for Feb. 3.

Residents who already have applied for Stanton's seat include Charles Michaelis, Eugene Van Dask, Lawrence Petrima, David Prebish, James Creighton, Roy Rodgers, Stephen Grimes and John McKnight.

Charges eyed after fatal Valley crash

Fountain Valley police are considering further charges against the driver involved in an automobile accident last week that took the life of a passenger.

Domatillo Garcia, 55, of Santa Ana died Tuesday night at Fountain Valley Community Hospital of head injuries suffered in the one-car crash last Thursday, police reported.

Abraham Diaz, 26, also of Santa Ana, was booked on suspicion of drunken driving. Police said his vehicle went out of control and struck a telephone pole on Harbor Boulevard south of Heil Avenue about 11:30 p.m.

Because the passenger has died, police said, a charge of vehicular manslaughter could be brought against the driver.

A second passenger, a 17-year-old male juvenile, also of Santa Ana, was unharmed in the accident, police said.

The car was split almost completely in half upon striking the telephone pole, police reported.

Census shows Coast booming

By FREDERICK SCHOEMEHL
Of the Daily Pilot Staff

Orange Coast communities were the boom communities of the 1970s, preliminary 1980 U.S. Census figures reaffirmed.

The figures, which remain subject to minor modifications, show the official Orange County population as 1,919,264 people, an increase of 35 percent over the 1970 figure of 1,421,233.

THE NUMBER OF housing units in the county increased to 719,318 from 463,199 in 1970, an increase of 55 percent.

The figures indicate what planning officials have suggested. The trend today is toward fewer people residing in a single housing unit. Simply stated, more people are living alone.

The preliminary figures show that Fountain Valley's population increased to 54,874 from 31,886 in 1970, an increase of 72 percent. The number of housing units increased to 16,741 from 8,976 in 1970, an increase of 86 percent.

IN NEIGHBORING Huntington Beach, the Census Bureau reports, the 1970 population of 115,460 increased to 170,597 for a 47 percent increase. The number of housing units in the city increased from 35,971 to 63,833, an increase of 77 percent.

Atypical among the coastal communities was Seal Beach which realized a 5.8 percent population increase from 24,441 to 25,876. Its number of residental units increased 17.7 percent to 13,927 from 11,834.

Figures previously released by the Census Bureau showed that Irvine's population, now at 68,650, increased more than 800 percent during the 10 years since the last census. Irvine became a city in 1971.

SAN JUAN Capistrano posted an increase of nearly 300 percent. Its population grew from 3,781 to 14,989 between 1970 and this year. The number of housing units increased from 1,394 to 5,910.

Costa Mesa grew by 12 percent, from 72,660 to 81,132 while the number of housing units increased by 34 percent from 24,823 to 33,361.

Newport Beach's population of 49,582 in 1970 grew to 58,352, an increase of nearly 18 percent. The city's housing stock increased more than 32 percent, from 22,522 to 29,855 units.

LAGUNA BEACH showed a population gain of 22 percent, from 14,550 to 17,800. The number of dwellings increased 24 percent to 9,464 from 7,628.

In San Clemente the population increased 59 percent over the 10-year period from 17,063 to 27,269. Housing units increased by 77 percent, from 7,479 to 13,259.

Anaheim remained the most populous city in the county with a population this year of 214,688, compared to 166,408 in 1970.

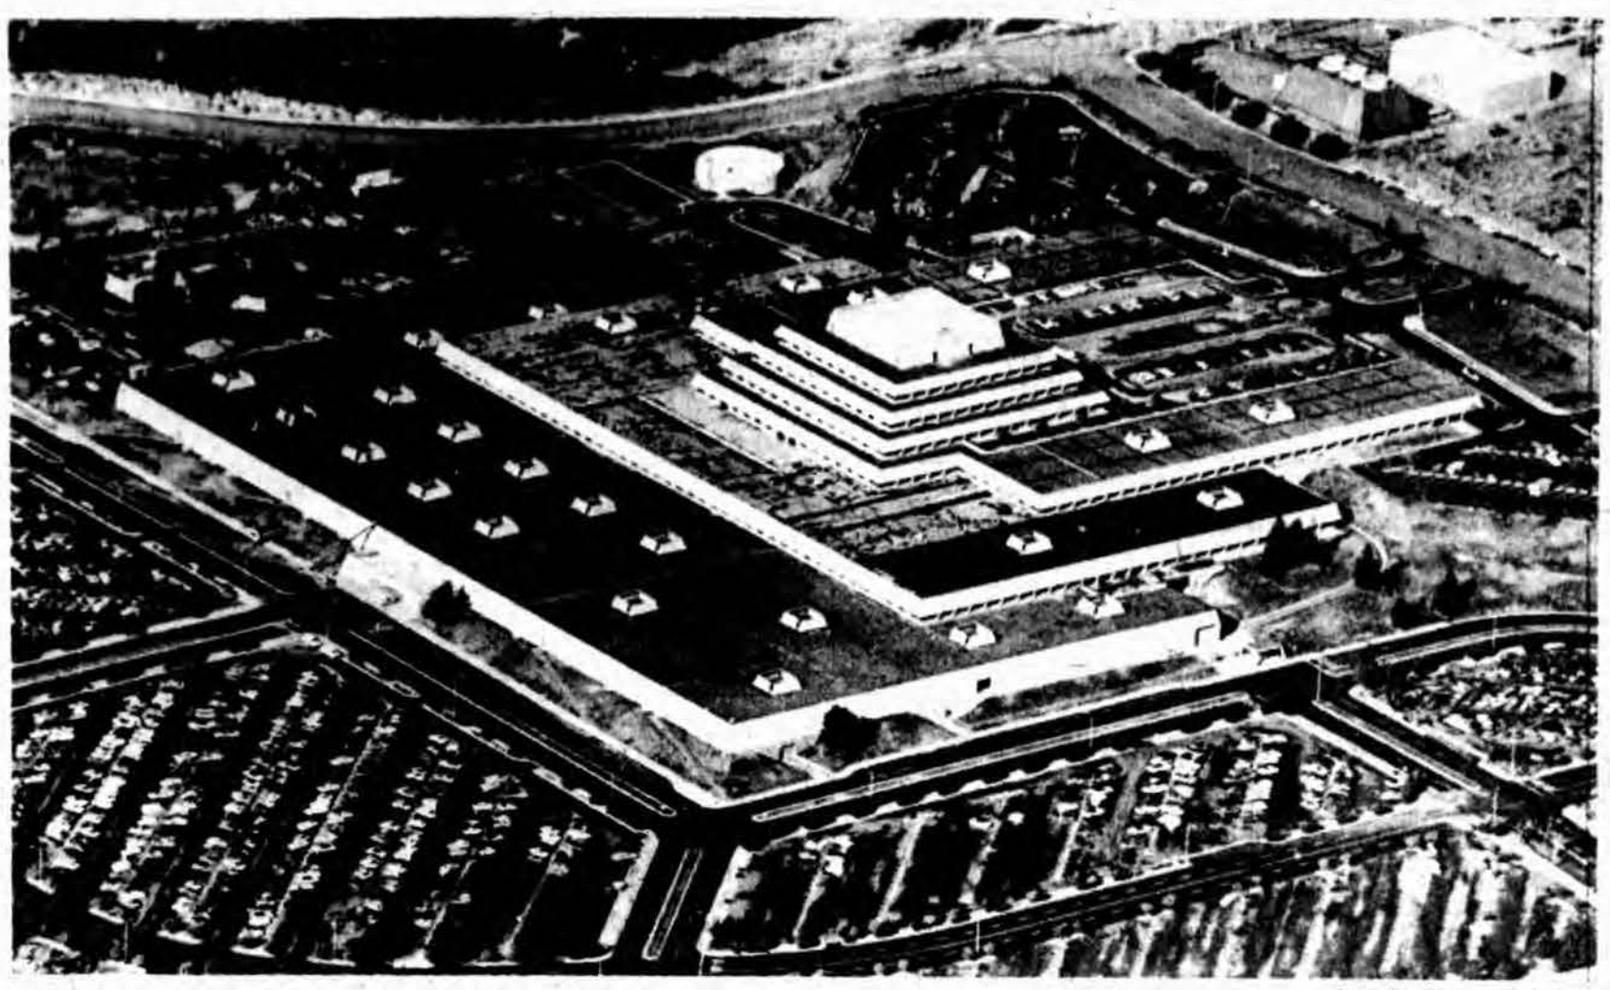

Second largest city, Santa Ana, now has 204,089 residents, compared to 155,710 in 1970.

TWO CITIES, Buena Park and Los Alamitos, showed population decreases, according to the census figures.

Buena Park lost about 1 percent of its population to 62,930 residents, despite more than a 4,000-unit increase in the number of dwellings.

Los Alamitos with a 1970 population of 11,346, had a 17 percent decline, to 9,439 residents.

John Ramirez, a census analyst, said the figures will be refined between now and Jan 1, when they are turned over in official form to the White House.

Work is about 60 percent complete on a $1.1 million roofing job atop the seven-tiered Chet Holifield federal building in Laguna Niguel. The building is used by the Internal Revenue Service and the U.S. Census Bureau.

Crowding of county jails told

The capacity of Orange County jails will be exceeded early in this decade and overcrowding will be the rule rather than the exception, according to a report from the county Administrative Office.

The county currently has 2,236 beds in its four jails: the main men's and women's jails in Santa Ana, the James A. Musick honor farm in El Toro and the Theo Lacy minimum-security jail in Orange.

ADMISSIONS TO the main men's jail have increased at 30 percent per year since 1975, though, and the 1,331-bed jail "approaches overcrowding on a regular basis," according to the report.

The County Board of Supervisors reviewed the report on Tuesday and told members of the administrative office and the county Sheriff's Department to monitor state funds for planning more jail facilities.

County officials apparently will need a lot of state funding to meet the projected increase of 1,786 beds needed to solve overcrowding by the year 2000. The cost to add those beds will be $100 million, even without counting inflation, according to the study.

THE REPORT prepared by program planner Ron LaPorte includes possibilities for enlarging the facilities. He said construction of a larger facility at the Musick site could be the first step to handle possible over-crowding at the main men's jail.

Plans are under way to add more beds for women at a separate jail in El Toro.

County cuts housing red tape

By GLENN SCOTT
Of the Daily Pilot Staff

County supervisors have approved a plan to reconstruct the way development plans are processed by Orange County's bureaucracy.

Proponents of the plan said the new system will speed up the county's cumbersome processing system, thereby saving developers time and home buyers money.

"It's like a giant Christmas gift to housing," suggested Douglas Gfeller, president of the Irvine-based Gfeller Development Co.

He was one of a group of representatives of the local housing industry who spent the last year creating the proposal, which was approved almost intact by the supervisors.

The plan, he said, is a "large shopping list of improvements," which could realistically cut processing time from 30 to 50 percent.

Estimating the savings to home buyers is more difficult, he said, adding "you're talking about thousands and thousands of dollars per house in savings in carrying costs alone."

Murray Storm, director of the county Environmental Management Agency, told the supervisors he can't wait to get started with some of the recommendations.

He said after the meeting that he was going to issue an order immediately to start a sweeping realignment of the planning functions to merge now-separated planning operations that examine either current permits and projects or future ones.

Among other features of the plan are:

Concurrent processing, where permits for general plan amendments, zoning changes and tract maps can be reviewed at the same time.

Creation of a project manager division in EMA with workers responsible for coordinating the processing to ensure fast service.

Relocation of EMA offices to reflect the reorganization and to create a so-called "one-stop" service center for applicants at the Engineering-Finance Building at the Santa Ana Civic Center.

Possible salary increases for planners, who have left the county government in large numbers during the past two years to accept jobs with private firms.

Projected needs for four more planners.

A monitoring program to examine how much, if any, of a time-savings is created by the new system, and publication of the results in an annual report.

Compilation of a manual to include all of the board of supervisors' policies on land use and development.

Officer, stop that bank

Action against building movers eyed

Legal action is pending today against AA Jet House Movers Inc., of Los Angeles, who Irvine police claim weren't exactly flying low while towing half of a bank building through their sleeping city Wednesday.

In fact, Patrolman Dennis McNeely alleged, the unwieldy convoy of five big trucks ferrying the former Bank of Newport headquarters spied at 12:05 a.m. was blocking all four lanes of Jamboree Boulevard.

AND NOT ONLY THAT, he and partner Officer Jim Broomfield claimed the moving crew headed for Riverside had halted near Michelson Drive to do some roof repairs on the structure.

They confronted foreman Arthur Aguilar and asked for his city moving permit, whereupon they alleged Aguilar handed them a torn scrap of paper with some numbers on it.

Under Section VIF-649 of the Irvine Municipal Code, that isn't sufficient to allow house towing, let alone roof repairs at a major intersection.

Investigators said Aguilar claimed that was indeed the number of the moving permit, but the bonafide legal paperwork was off up the road somewhere.

Officers McNeely and Broomfield claimed Aguilar told them that was where the other half of the convoy — the transport crew and the other half of the old Bank of Newport were.

The ungainly mobile bank building segments were finally allowed to proceed on their way with a warning not to block traffic, but police want legal action taken against the moving firm.

A SPOKESMAN FOR the Bank of Newport said this morning the dismantled structure, formerly at the corner of Pacific Coast Highway and Avocado Street, Corona del Mar, was sold.

He said he didn't know who bought the portable structure when his bank was replaced by permanent quarters at the same location.

Cub survives blaze, faces bigger test

A female mountain lion cub, apparently separated from its mother by the recent fire in Orange County, is in isolation today at the Wildlife Waystation in the San Fernando Valley, where an attempt may be made to prepare it for re-introduction to the wild.

The lion was found under a cabin stairway in the Holy Jim Canyon area of the Santa Ana Mountains by David Spencer of Lakewood, and turned over to the California Department of Fish and Game Dec. 1.

Warden Ron Duvall, who took custody of the cub, said residents of the area believe another, larger cub, is still in the vicinity.

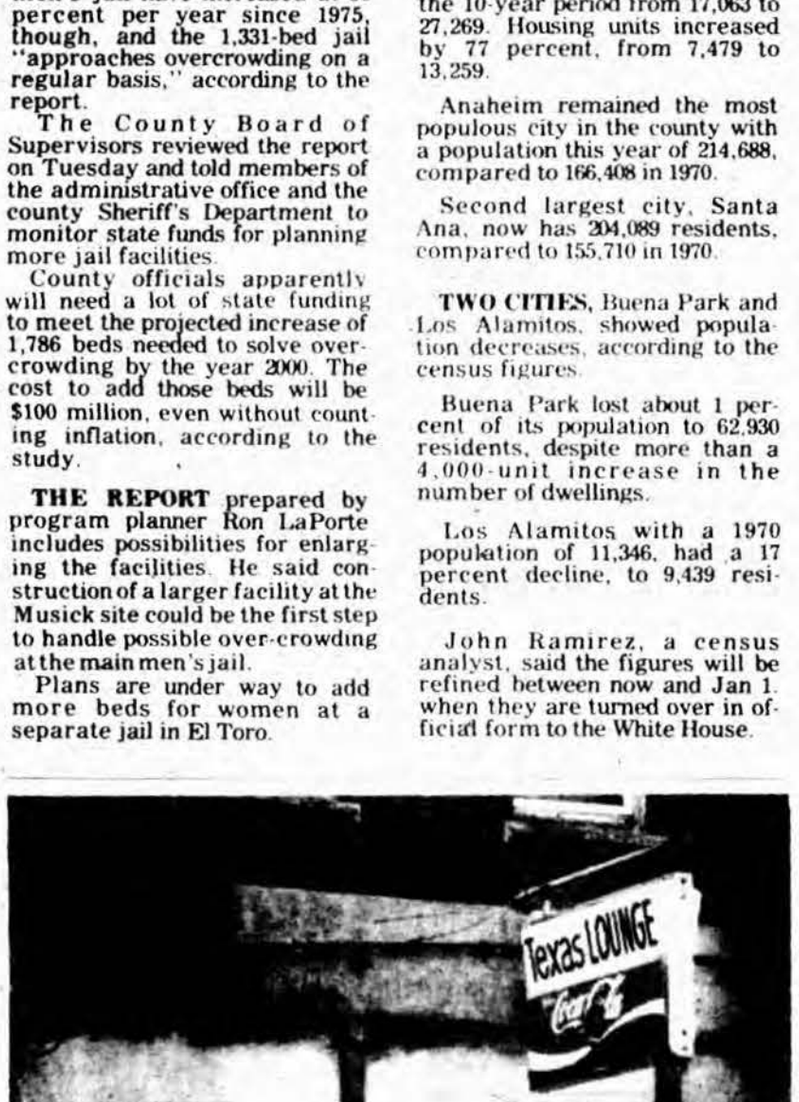

"They've heard it crying at night," he said. Spencer said he had seen it twice.

The fish and game wildlife manager in Orange County, Steve Kimple, believes the other cub, if larger, may be a male. He estimates the mountain lion population in the Santa Ana range at about 12.

Martine Colette, proprietor of the waystation, has placed the lion cub by itself in a separate part of the compound, where public access is restricted. Every effort is being made to avoid human contact.

It is expected that it may take as long as a year before the cub could be released, but both Kimple and Duvall have their doubts about a successful outcome.

Mountain lions once associated with human beings are seldom rehabilitated in the wild, Kimple said.

It snore was lots of fun

LOCAL POLITIZ WITH A ZZzzz: It has been described as important, fruitful, even by one official as a coup d' etat. This, my friends, was an historic meeting of the good Huntington Beach City Council.

It may not have really been any of the superlatives listed above. But Monday night's session of the Huntington lawmakers was a couple of things for certain.

It was a marathon. And, two, it was even longer than that.

Listen: the Huntington Beach council went into session at 6 p.m. Monday night and Tuesday was well on its way to being shot by the time it ended.

MERCIFULLY, the final gavel fell weakly against the podium at 4 a.m. — 10 hours after the proceeding had opened.

Huntington Beach historians are currently searching feverishly through the record books trying to see if this is the longest Huntington Beach council session on record.

You can save them the fever. It clearly is, unless you count those San Francisco sessions with the League of California Cities as one council meeting. Only the city of Irvine could approach this 4 a.m. record.

What in the world do you suppose a city council could DO until 4 o'clock in the morning?

SOME WIVES AND HUSBANDS of Huntington Beach council members could well have been pondering that question themselves as they sat with the knitting and late, late, late show.

Huntington councilman going home after marathon session

Well, one thing the council people allege they did was to form a new superagency of administrative services and appoint the current acting city administrator, Ben Arguello, to head it up. He had nominated himself.

This drew a cry of foul from City Treasurer Warren Hall, who apparently envisioned himself as a heavy candidate for the new directorship.

Hall labeled the action "a coup d' etat."

THAT'S FRENCH, I think. The dictionary says a coup d' etat is, "A sudden, forceful stroke in politics; especially, the sudden forceful overthrow of the government."

It was reported that the Huntington council did this coup thing — if it was a coup thing — at 3:45 a.m. on Tuesday.

You're left to wonder how they could do anything sudden or forceful at that hour except fall off the council chair.

Most people are so dazed at that hour they couldn't even overthrow an ink blotter. At that time of morning, I even have trouble finding the bathroom light switch.

IF HUNTINGTON BEACH officialdom was going to overthrow the government, the least they could do would be to wait until a decent time of day so a few people would be awake to enjoy it.

Revolutions at 3:45 in the morning show a definite lack of consideration for the people being revolutionized.

After this historic council session finally lurched off to a conclusion, Mayor Ruth Bailey said the nice thing about it was that when it was all over, the council persons didn't end up hating each other.

You can understand that. It's hard to hate somebody when your eyeballs have glazed over.

Missile plan impact manageable

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Air Force today released its long-awaited study of the impact on Utah and Nevada of deploying the proposed MX missile system, and described the effects as "manageable."

Air Force Undersecretary Antonia Chayes told reporters that, "while the impacts may appear severe when viewed from the perspective of a little-developed area of the country, from a national perspective — and MX is a national program "the impacts are not that large."

BRIEFING REPORTERS in advance of the report's release she called the impact statement a comprehensive and exhaustive study that can guide policymakers in their final decisions on the MX.

But congressional critics were less charitable, describing the 1,900-page report as "the same old euphemisms suggesting that there is no problem too large for the Air Force to solve."

The report reaffirms the Air Force's preference for the desert valleys of Utah and Nevada for deploying the planned $34 billion missile system.

The $17 million study envisions thousands of construction workers, their families and related workers flooding into Utah and Nevada during the peak MX construction years in the mid- to late-1980s.

The study says 85,000 people will be added to the region's population during that time, with a permanent population increase of about 31,000.

Ms. Chayes said that the predicted MX impact, while "not negligible," are "certainly . . . manageable. The potential mitigation measures combined with good planning and management by both the Air Force and state and local governments can reduce impacts measurably."

Communities will be hard pressed to provide necessary services, and will need federal assistance, the study says. Scarce water supplies will be stretched thin, with significant impact on groundwater levels possible in some areas.

Water may have to be imported from other regions, and the Air Force at the least will have to buy water rights from existing users while stressing conservation and recycling.

But Ms. Chayes said none of the drawbacks is drastic enough to scuttle the project. And none, she asserted, is severe enough to overcome the strategic need for a new missile system.

"Defense officials do not regard 'no action' as a serious alternative," she declared. "MX must be deployed somewhere, and therefore the focus . . . is on selection among alternative deployment areas."

THE MX IS TOUTED BY defense officials as the successor to the present Minuteman intercontinental ballistic missile system. Defense experts say the Minuteman is becoming increasingly vulnerable to Soviet attack.

The MX system would consist of 200 missiles mounted on portable launchers that would shuttle among some 4,600 reinforced shelters in a massive "shell game" intended to confuse Soviet missile targeters.

Mother of slayer convicted by jury

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — A 65-year-old woman has been convicted of first-degree murder by a jury that found she knew her son planned to strangle and dismember his wife but failed to do anything to stop him.

The verdict was returned Wednesday night against Helen Ulvinen in Hennepin County District Court.

AFTER JUDGE Patrick Fitzgerald and the jury left the room, Mrs. Ulvinen's attorney, Stephen Doyle, spoke to her. She started crying softly, then loudly wailed, "How can they do this? I didn't even know what was going on."

That had been her contention throughout the four-day trial. Mrs. Ulvinen had testified Tuesday that she did not assist her son, David Hoffman, 34, in the killing and she did not want her daughter-in-law, Carol Hoffman, 26, to die. She said she liked the victim, despite testimony from her son that they didn't get along.

Mrs. Ulvinen was accused of knowing of her son's murder plans but failing to try to stop him or warn Carol Hoffman or police. Under state law an accomplice to a crime is as guilty as the person who actually commits the crime.

Hoffman has admitted strangling his wife at their Corcoran home, dismembering the body and dumping the remains in two bags in nearby Weaver Lake.

He then reported her missing but confessed to investigators nine days later. He said he had been planning the killing for up to a year because of marital problems. A divorce, he said, might have meant the loss of custody of his two children.

He implicated his mother when he told detectives that, when he informed his mother of his plans, she replied, "It will be for the best." He also quoted his mother as saying that "you had to do it for the sake of these kids."

In court, however, Hoffman refuted his earlier statements and said his mother knew nothing about the crime.

THE TRIAL was unusual because of the grisly nature of the crime, and because Hoffman, who awaits trial in February, chose to testify against the advice of his attorney.

The verdict followed two days of deliberations. Fitzgerald set sentencing for Monday. Mrs. Ulvinen faces a mandatory life prison sentence. She will not be eligible for parole for at least 17 years, when she is 82.

Fan-powered auto gets 117 mpg

CLEVELAND (AP) — A former aeronautical engineer says he hopes to get financing to produce a fan-powered car which he says can get 117 miles per gallon at near-highway speeds.

J.R. Bede proved to observers Wednesday that his rocket-shaped "Bede Car" can move under the power of an engine-driven ducted fan in its rear.

In a press conference, he sat behind the wheel of the 980-pound vehicle, drove it down a road 100 yards and back again.

Bede and his cousin, James D. Bede, the president of Bede Industries Inc., said they hope they can obtain financing to produce the vehicle in kit form within two years and thus avoid meeting all federal requirements.

California

Patchy fog settled over many areas of Southern California today, causing problems for drivers in the north San Fernando Valley but only briefly stopping operations at Los Angeles International Airport, authorities said.

Low clouds and fog will return to many areas tonight, bringing cooler temperatures along the coast and in the valleys Friday, the National Weather Service predicted. Only partial clearing is expected by afternoon.

Visibility was reduced to less than 50 feet today along an eight mile stretch of the Golden State Freeway from Newhall to Simi Valley Freeway in Granada Hills just before midnight. An alert remained in effect well into the morning, the California Highway patrol said.

Temperatures should be more seasonable in Los Angeles, with the high expected to reach only into the upper 60s, a considerable drop from the record high upper 80s reached this week.

U.S. Summary

Light snow was forecast for the Great Lakes and the northern Atlantic Coast states today, with a chance of scattered light snow over Montanna and Wyoming.

In the past few hours light snow was reported across the northern Great Lakes region and over the upper Missouri River Valley.

Freezing drizzle fell over parts of Montana. Most other areas had clear skies.

Fog and stagnant air persisted in Oregon, hampering visibility on highways and curtailing air traffic.

Temperatures around the nation at 2 a.m. EST ranged from 12 degrees below zero in Houlton, Maine, to 61 degrees in Key West, Fla.

Toxic liquid spilled

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Thirteen paramedics were treated for exposure to insecticide after a tanker truck overturned on a hill, killing one man and covering a road for 100 yards with the highly toxic liquid.

Three farm workers on the truck were injured in the accident Wednesday. Pablo Alvarado, 19, of Oaxaca, Mexico, died of accident injuries, not exposure to the insecticide.

The paramedics were exposed to guthion 2S, an organic phosphate poison registered for use on tomato crops.

Early quiz granted in Robbins case

SACRAMENTO (AP) — State Sen. Alan Robbins' prosecutor has won permission to take pretrial testimony from a girlfriend of a woman who says Robbins seduced her when she was 16.

Robbins, 37, a Van Nuys Democrat, is charged with illegal sexual conduct with three teen-age girls and possession of a small amount of marijuana. He has pleaded innocent.

On Wednesday, Superior Court Judge Benjamin Diaz granted Deputy District Attorney Albert Locher permission to take videotaped testimony from Kathy Noyes, a friend of alleged victim Lori Terwilliger.

Locher said Ms. Noyes is scheduled to leave Saturday for six months in Australia and will not be available at Robbins' trial, to start Jan. 26.

He said the testimony will be presented to jurors if Robbins is ordered to stand trial. A preliminary hearing is scheduled for Dec. 29 to determine if a trial is needed.

Ms. Noyes did not testify before the grand jury that indicted Robbins on Oct. 31, but her name was mentioned by several witnesses.

Ms. Terwilliger and one of her friends, Susan Hague, told jurors that early in 1979 Ms. Noyes accompanied them to Robbins' Sacramento apartment, where they smoked marijuana.

Ms. Terwilliger, now 18, said Robbins had given her a key, but was not present when they visited.

Radioactive waste dumping admitted

SANTA BARBARA (AP) — The federal Environmental Protection Agency has admitted that low-level radioactive waste was dumped in three deep-sea locations south of Santa Cruz Island in the 1950s and early 1960s.

Agency officials said they do not know much about the nature of the waste or the precise location of the dumps, but are investigating whether they posed health or environmental hazards.

Navigational maps published by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration indicate a "chemical munition dumping area" in the general area indicated by the EPA.

THE THREE sites indicated by the EPA range in depth from 3,600 feet to 6,000 feet and extend from six to more than 30 miles south of Santa Cruz Island.

The waste was packed in 55-gallon drums weighted with cement.

William R. Curtis, of the EPA's office of Radiation Programs, said "both the packaging and procedures previously used and the disposal of radioactive wastes at sites considered acceptable in the past would be considered substandard today."

The EPA information came in a letter to Fred Eissler of the Scenic Shoreline Preservation Conference of Santa Barbara, a citizens' group. Eissler had asked about possible nuclear waste dump sites in or near the Santa Barbara Channel.

In his reply, Curtis said EPA and NOAA are preparing a program to monitor the old offshore waste disposal sites that will include "intensive assessment efforts of past disposal practices at all sites."

CURTIS CITED an EPA report that said since most of the waste "was regarded primarily as garbage, precise records were apparently not kept of the specific locations."

The now-defunct Atomic Energy Commission was in charge of civilian and military nuclear waste disposal during the period when the dumps were used.

Dry regions may get rain

By The Associated Press

A 20 percent chance of showers offers hope of breaking Northern California's long dry spell today or Friday, but the National Weather Service says the soupy haze plaguing the central and coastal valleys will linger on.

Scattered showers over the Sierra Nevada are expected to dump snow above the 9,000 foot level.

Little change of temperature is expected in most areas.

Flu epidemic looming

New LA area outbreak could get worse

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A mild influenza epidemic which has left a lot of empty desks at school and work and may have caused some deaths could grow worse in the next few weeks, health officials said.

Evidence that the influenza strain dubbed A-Bangkok-1979, so named because it was first detected in that Thailand city in late 1979, surfaced in late October when doctors at the Claremont Colleges noticed students arriving for treatment of flu-like symptoms.

"We've isolated the virus all over the county from a college-age group in the San Gabriel Valley to nursing homes in the San Fernando and Gardena-Inglewood areas as well as in central Los Angeles," said Dr. Shirley Fannin, chief of acute communicable disease control at the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services.

Fannin said A-Bangkok-1979 strain is characterized by such symptoms as high fever, headaches or body aches, some sore throats and coughs. It is "rather severe" for three to five days.

"People with it are generally not able to get up and get out of bed," she said. "Very often, we see a two-week recovery period. You're not terribly ill but you feel weak. People with it get depressed and wonder if they will ever get well again. Most people will get as sick as the devil but they will recover."

The influenza strain, however, is not as acute as the Hong Kong virus that attacked Southern California residents in 1963 or the Asian flu of 1957, which by Nov. 20 of that year had killed 892 people in the United States.

Fannin said the current epidemic should peak by late January or early February and said the fact that schools will close next week for the holidays should help limit the spread of the disease.

Pet deer doomed? Many ask mercy

SACRAMENTO (AP) — A 110-pound buck deer, once a pet, is to be put to sleep next week because state officials say it is dangerous.

The Sacramento Bee said today that pleas to save the deer were pouring into county and state offices. It said some of the callers were rangeland owners who volunteered to give the deer a home.

The deer is now in a state laboratory at Sacramento State University where it was used in a veterinarian test.

STATE DEPARTMENT of Fish and Game veterinarian David Jessup and laboratory director Howard Leach both said Wednesday that all alternatives to death had been considered. "But we haven't changed our minds," said Jessup.

The deer had been taken from Grand Island, in the Sacramento River, on Nov. 23 after reportedly butting a neighbor. It had been brought from the Sierra by a family of migrant workers, who were keeping it as a pet.

Jessup said the animal, despite his temporary lack of antlers, was determined to be capable of killing humans.

He added, "We have pictures of people being disemboweled and gored by bucks that were raised in captivity by humans. Wild deer run when they see man. But this buck has lost his fear of humans."

THE SACRAMENTO RIVER Delta warden who took in the deer, Jim Dixon, said, "If you'd seen me and several other people get butted by this deer, you'd understand. Our concern is the school children nearby waiting for a bus. When these deer lose their fear of humans, there isn't a human being who can defend himself against their strength."

Officials at Folsom Zoo considered taking the deer, but changed their minds. Zookeeper Gordon Brong said injuries from domesticated deer are more frequent than from other kinds of animals.

Before putting it to death, the DFG decided to use the deer to test a new livestock virus. The virus did not make the deer sick.

Compromise bails out HB developer

The South Coast Regional Coastal Commission has fallen short of State Coastal Act philosophy by allowing the developers of a Huntington Beach commercial and marina center to eliminate a proposed hotel.

The developers offered to eliminate the 72-unit hotel to make amends for alleged overbuilding of the Peter's Landing Center located at Pacific Coast Highway and Anderson Street in the Huntington Harbour area.

Parking spaces for the often overloaded parking lot will replace the proposed hotel.

But the decision by the Regional Coastal Commission reverses its own mandate of 1976 that required the hotel to be a "visitor serving facility" for the coastline.

A report from the state attorney general's office indicates developers of the center exceeded Regional Coastal Commission permits by 20,000 square feet and could be fined or ordered to tear down buildings.

But at the meeting last month, commissioners indicated that poor permit recording and missing files have confused the issue. Commissioners also indicated that this confusion forced the somewhat one-sided compromise that will alleviate a parking problem by allowing developers to eliminate a hotel they never wanted to build.

Although the visitor-serving requirement of the State Coastal Act was eliminated, the commissioners did not over-react and approve a staff recommendation that the developers be ordered to build a hotel elsewhere in the coastal zone.

The commission unanimously rejected the recommendation as unreasonable.

The whole controversy could have been avoided by reasonable bookkeeping.

Bands on the march

There seems to be almost no end to recognition and national exposure for West Orange County high school bands.

Huntington Beach High School started it off by marching in Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade in New York.

Edison High School has been selected to perform in the Tournament of Roses in Pasadena on Jan. 1.

And to cap it all is the selection of the Fountain Valley High School band to march in President-elect Ronald Reagan's inauguration parade in Washington, D.C., on Jan. 20.

Reagan and the Fountain Valley band are no strangers. The local band performed at his political rally earlier this year at Mile Square Park.

But the Baron band was picked by Reagan's inauguration committee based on its performance and by videotapes, photographs and scrapbooks detailing accomplishments.

The big challenge now facing the 150 bandsmen and members of the tall flag group is raising $90,000 to finance the trip.

Band director Frank Barnes and some parents say they will mortgage their homes to raise money if need be.

But donations have been reported flowing in, both from private industry and private citizens who are mailing in money from Santa Barbara to San Diego.

That kind of spirit of sacrifice and generosity says much for the band's success.

We'll indeed be proud to be watching the Baron band performing in the capital on Jan. 20.

Campus cooler

Consistency has not always been a hallmark of city police patrols at Huntington Beach's 51 public school campuses.

Different officers handled different calls, and repeat offenders could claim time and again that they had never been in trouble before.

In September, with the blessing of local school districts, the police launched a pilot program that placed two officers on a schools beat exclusively.

The pair, officers Steve Mack and J.B. Hume, divide up the campuses and keep an eye out for everything from drug sales to traffic offenses. They also concentrate on reducing the vandalism and burglaries that traditionally plague residential neighborhoods surrounding schools.

More than half of the serious crimes committed in California are attributed to juveniles. It is logical to focus some special attention on the school campuses where young people spend much of their time.

Because of their daily patrols, the school officers have become acquainted with regular campus troublemakers. At the same time, their frequent appearances gradually are helping them win the respect of many law-abiding students.

Thus far, the school patrol program appears to be accomplishing its aims. If this trend continues through the remainder of the one-year tryout, the police department should consider making these beats permanent.

Boyd/Musical trick

By L.M. BOYD

Musicians learn early that they can quiet down a noisy audience simply by playing softly. You don't get that kind of racket in the concert halls, not usually. But it happens often in the Las Vegas-type clubs. And the performers need all their tricks to put in a good night's work. The harmonica whiz Larry Adler specializes in it. He manages his audience by the way he plays the instrument.

Civil defense efforts founder

WASHINGTON — Ronald Reagan's vice president-elect, George Bush, asserted during the primary campaign that a nuclear war was in fact winnable. But the government agency most directly responsible for safeguarding the American populace from a nuclear holocaust emphatically disagrees.

The underfunded, overlooked Federal Emergency Management Agency is charged with protection of the American people in the event that Soviet nuclear bombs start raining down on the continental United States. But a confidential FEMA report — prepared under contract by the National Governors' Association — makes clear that our preparations for civil defense can be summed up in one word: deplorable.

Indeed, Defense Department assessments cited in the FEMA report estimate that, in our present state of civil defense disarray, "some 160 million people would be killed by an attack." The Pentagon didn't even try to guess what additional injuries would be sustained by those who survived an enemy nuclear strike.

MEANWHILE, of course, our intelligence agencies report that the Soviet Union has intensified its efforts in recent years to improve its civil defense program. And as FEMA has learned in its unsuccessful efforts to get support for its programs, critics insist that an adequate civil defense setup can lead the military to think the unthinkable — that nuclear war is a reasonable option.

"There is a general overestimation by the American public about national civil defense planning and funding," the FEMA report states, adding: "National policy has been equivocal, and guidance from the federal level has been negligible."

In particular, the document discloses an appalling lack of cooperation between Washington and the 50 state governments, which are ultimately responsible for the safety of the public in a nuclear attack.

"Governors and citizens trust that the federal government is planning for the major programs dealing with an attack," the secret report notes, adding bluntly: "That is a delusion."

Here are some of the basic problems perceived by the civil defense agency:

— POPULATION relocation. The primary method envisioned so far by our planners to save lives in case of enemy attack is the movement of huge numbers of people from target areas — what FEMA calls "Crisis Relocation Planning." The trouble is that many of the state officials who would have to carry out this logistical nightmare have concluded simply that it won't work.

— Communications. "Governors in general do not know how they will be notified if an attack is imminent," the report states. "Will there be individual telephone calls from the president? From the Department of Defense? From FEMA?" Many governors don't even have the security clearance that would entitle them to the latest intelligence estimates. They might — like ordinary citizens — have to depend on the media for their information.

— "CONTINUITY of leadership." Preparation of self-sufficient emergency centers for local and national leaders is viewed as a necessity by the civil defense planners. There are thousands of these "emergency operating centers" now in existence, dating back to the days following the Cuban missile crisis in 1962. These centers should be blast-resistant and equipped with reliable communications systems. But the FEMA report found that most of these centers are in pitiful condition, and would be useless in the event of nuclear attack.

GATHERING NUTS: Throughout its history, the Federal Bureau of Investigation has had to keep tabs on an incredible number of cuckoos, and until his death in 1972 Director J. Edgar Hoover wanted to be kept informed on all of them.

One far-out organization that drew the FBI's — and Hoover's — attention was the "Silver Shirts of America," a Nazi-like group founded by one William Pelley in Asheville, N.C. Anti-Semitic and anti-communist, it flourished in the 1930s and numbered thousands of adherents. Pelley made a comfortable living writing publications and selling uniforms.

According to a "personal and confidential" letter to Hoover from the Charlotte, N.C., FBI office in the early 1930s, an unidentified Oregonian had received a visionary "ray of light" some years previously, predicting that "first, a great national figure would (die) in a seeming air accident. second, a powerful figure in politics would be assassinated. third, a man would come forth and boldly enter the lists on a platform of Christ and the Constitution."

The first predictions conceivably came true. Humorist Will Rogers died in a plane crash in August 1935, and Sen. Huey Long was assassinated a month later.

Pelley, of course, viewed himself as the third man in the prediction. He died in the 1960s, still under J. Edgar Hoover's watchful eye.

Who is responsible for all the killing?

To the Editor:

The controversy goes on — who is responsible for the deaths of: King, Kennedy and now Lennon? You must also include all the small children who on their way home from school, get murdered for no obvious reason.

There is no "obvious" or public mourning for Lisa Rosales. Only her family are lighting candles, and they are not marching down the Sunset Strip or playing Beatles' records. They are just heartbroken that someone would destroy a beautiful 7-year-old, a beautiful Black leader, a wonderful President.

Where does this all end? Who will take the responsibility for all this decadence? Will taking away guns from the public do it? (Doubtful).

Legislation is only effective with law-abiding citizens; what about the other faction? They get seven years at our expense and are released to repeat their previous errors.

So who is responsible for all this? I guess we are — would you believe?

Applause

To the Editor:

Re The Associated Press article titled "Man's for Animals," dated Sunday, Dec. 14, I would like to give a good round of applause for Michael Fox.

His enlightened attitude on the treatment of animals in this country, especially those used for human consumption, i.e. veal calves, chickens and swine, is one with which I can highly identify.

He is neither a vegetarian nor an antivivisectionist, but a humane, compassionate veterinarian.

Long may his banner wave!

Misinformation

To the Editor:

With the death last week of John Lennon, who led, perhaps, the most public life of any man of the last 20 years, we were indeed shocked by the number of factual errors made by the news media regarding his life and career. For example:

— Several writers have cited the lyrics "the dream is over" (from Lennon's 1970 album "Plastic Ono Band") to sum up his death, incorrectly referring to it as a song title. The song in which those lyrics appeared was titled "God."

— Cleave Herman, of KFWB radio, identified Paul McCartney as the Beatles' lead guitarist and George Harrison as their bassist. The reverse is true.

— CBS News identified George Martin as the manager of the Beatles. He was their producer.

Obviously, John Lennon should not be made out to be more than he actually was. (The rock press will undoubtedly be calling him a god.) However, he was in fact a great musician, composer, and tireless worker for peace and social justice. He cared about us. We only wish that the people reporting his death would have cared enough about him to chronicle his life accurately.

Gun laws

To the Editor:

Having just read your Dec. 10 editorial on "Guns Still Killing," I got a little mad. I wondered if you or your paper were aware of some of the following facts. First, all guns are registered with the federal government and have been for almost 12 years. (1968 Federal Gun Control Act.)

However, when it comes to handguns, they are registered with both the state and federal governments. The state of California has a 15-day mandatory waiting period on the purchase of a handgun, from the time of purchase to the time a person can pick up the gun.

DURING THIS time each person is run through the C.I.& I. (Criminal Identification and Investigation) computers in Sacramento to make it legal for him or her to purchase a handgun. The buyer must be able to pass both state and federal questions before being able to purchase and pick up (after 15 days) a handgun.

Also, any person who buys two or more handguns in a seven-day period has his or her name sent to the local federal A.T.F. (Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms) office. When any person purchases a handgun a copy of the state form is sent to that person's chief of police in the city or town they live in. At the present time, the state of California has on its books a law that makes it a five-year jail sentence if a handgun is used in the committing of a crime. This law or jail sentence is one of the first things thrown out by our liberal judges when a criminal who has used a handgun in a crime comes up before them. It's called plea bargaining.

Please, we have more than enough laws on the books at the present time; let's just enforce them. I feel just as bad as the next person when there are needless murders and killings, but I don't think more legislation is the answer. I feel we have a problem in the courts and the criminal justice system. Let's work on them.

Flag disgraced

To the Editor:

We were told at Louisiana Pacific on Bristol Street in Costa Mesa that their flag was at half mast for John Lennon!

This is a disgrace to our flag and our country and all the noble loyal citizens who put their lives on the line every day for America and her people.

I called the store and the general office and was informed that he was a national hero to some people. What a sick society — I knew it was bad, but this disgrace to our flag tops it.

Spending hints

To the Editor:

After attending the Dec. 2 meeting of the Huntington Beach Union High School Board of Education, I have concluded that the board wants the chickens who are left to decide how the fox should behave in the future. For the past several years, the board, under the direction of Dr. Abbott, has been raiding the chicken coop, and now that the money, as they claim, is gone, the board is asking the teachers to find out where it went and how the board, in the future, might be more careful with the limited resources left.

The public should be aware that the district has in its employ several highly paid "experts" in the field of school finance but due to their manipulations with magic pencils and rubber figures, the board itself can't figure out where the money is being spent. And then, when a committee of teachers who, after teaching 180 or more students a day, have gone through the budget, the board doesn't believe the facts.

I HAVE a few ideas of where the money was spent — the building of a high school that the voters turned down several times; two expensive moves of the district office that required substantial (and in some instances, luxurious) remodeling; the purchase of a telephone system that breaks down regularly (when we could "rent" a system from General Telephone without a large capital outlay); a salary for the superintendent that is greater than that of the governor; expense accounts and travel expenses for district staff; and a proliferation of district personnel that is directly in proportion to the decrease in money allocated for the schools.

I can also suggest where the money should have been spent. If the district had to divest iself of over $3 million in order to qualify for Proposition 13 bail-out money, why didn't they stock up on paper, desks, books, cleaning supplies, typewriters, industrial arts machinery, library books — in other words, items that could be used by students?

Riley opposes South Laguna tower

By FREDERICK SCHOEMEHL
Of the Daily Pilot Staff

Orange County Supervisor Thomas Riley says he is "not supportive" of the proposal to construct a 24-story time share condominium hotel on the Treasure Island property in South Laguna.

Riley announced his negative reaction to the proposal advanced by owners of the Treasure Island land, now the site of a 266-unit mobile home park, during a hearing Wednesday on a state-mandated plan that will guide future development in South Laguna.

The Local Coastal Program plan for South Laguna was among four such documents adopted by the board for submission to the state Coastal Commission. Other plans cover the Irvine Coast between Laguna Beach and Corona del Mar and portions of Laguna Canyon.

Riley, whose district includes South Laguna, said he was "not planning to support such a tower on the Treasure Island property."

The supervisor urged those backing the project — developers Merrill Johnson, Bernard Syfan and Ed Stanton — to reassess their plans.

Riley stated his opposition to what would be the county's tallest oceanfront building at the outset of a hearing in which South Lagunans roundly condemned the proposal to turn Treasure Island into a "tourist-recreation" district.

The residents complained that such land uses would overburden Pacific Coast Highway and upset the so-called village character of the unincorporated community immediately south of Laguna Beach.

And they claimed that loss of Treasure Island would mean a loss of affordable housing.

The residents were successful in convincing supervisors to modify the tourist-recreation designation so that it would permit the existing Treasure Island mobile home park to remain indefinitely.

Whether the dual tourist-recreational/mobile home park designations will meet with approval of the Coastal Commission isn't known.

In other South Laguna-related actions, the board approved a proposal advanced by Riley to scale down development on the Mahboubi-Fardi property in Hobo Canyon from 700 to 500 units. Of the 500 units, 25 percent or 125 units would be affordable to persons with low and moderate incomes.

Forty-one of the units would be set aside for relocation of resi-

Nuclear decision delayed

City Council members have delayed a decision on an evacuation plan for San Clemente in the event of a nuclear incident, saying they want more time to study the document.

"I consider this a good plan, probably the best plan around," Councilman Bill Mecham said Wednesday night.

But, he said, "the (Southern California) Edison Co. is going to take this into the NRC (Nuclear Regulatory Commission) hearings and say, 'San Clemente says this is okay,' and I just don't feel comfortable with that."

The evacuation plan, prepared over the past several months under Fire Chief Ron Coleman's direction, was funded by the Edison Co., owners of the San Onofre Nuclear Generating Station, just three miles south of San Clemente.

The document outlines a list of duties that would be performed by city officials, including police and fire personnel to expedite an evacuation of the city.

It calls for the evacuation of school children, elderly residents, the handicapped and prisoners.

Warning sirens, to be installed by Edison, would be placed in various locations around town, and traffic control for evacuees would be provided by police officers.

And while council members appeared impressed with the document, which underwent four drafts before the report was presented to the council Wednesday night, several members still had misgivings.

Councilmen Robert Limberg said, "Contingency plans don't work unless you have the capacity to achieve the plan, and moving everyone out of San Clemente is a pretty big process."

Mecham agreed, turning to Fire Chief Coleman and saying, "I don't think you can tell me categorically it will provide safety for all the citizens of San Clemente."

Few Bangkok flu cases in county

Although a new strain of influenza has started to spread in Los Angeles County, only a few possible cases of the disease have been reported in Orange County, health officials say. (Related story Page A5).

In fact, the so-called Bangkok Flu hasn't had the effect that a still undiagnosed gastrointestinal bug has had, forcing some Orange County residents to miss a few days of work or school.

The Bangkok Flu is a strain of influenza-A and was first diagnosed in 1979. Officials in Los Angeles County report cases of the flu in all parts of their area.

In Orange County, however, only two cases of influenza-A have been reported — in a convalescent home in Laguna Hills. Tom Prendergast, epidemiologist for the county Public Health Department, said the exact strain wasn't isolated, so officials aren't sure whether it was the Bangkok variety.

No large outbreaks of flu have been reported at local schools, said Barbara Peck, supervising public health nurse for the county.

She said a less-severe gastrointestinal disease is making the rounds of county residents, although doctors haven't confirmed that a viral infection is responsible.

So far, the changing seasons haven't brought abnormal outbreaks of illness to Orange County, said Prendergast, although he said more incidences of sickness are predictable in colder weather.

He said the county may not be hit with the Bangkok flu simply because Los Angeles County has been beset with the strain.

"We've had plenty of opportunity to import it from all over the world," he noted.

Officials say the Bangkok Flu can last for up to two weeks and includes severe symptoms, including high fever, sore throat and aches.

Dana boats to parade

Boats and yachts of Dana Point Harbor will parade with colored lights, music and Christmas themes Saturday from 6 to 8 p.m.

The annual "Holiday Lights" parade will circle the waterways of both west and east basins, affording dockside viewers a sparkling season's greetings.

The event is co-sponsored by the Dana Point Harbor Association and the Aventura Sailing Association. The sportsfishing boat "Sea Horse" will lead the procession with Santa Claus and the Dana Hills High School Christmas band providing entertainment.

Police say victim hit twice by car

An elderly woman who died following a Laguna Beach traffic accident was struck twice by the same car in the intersection of Myrtle Street and Cedar Way, police indicated today.

Elsie Lindt, about 70, of 559 Cypress #3, died at Mission Community Hospital following the accident Tuesday afternoon.

Police said a car driven by Suzannah Neighbour, 59, of Santa Ana, struck the victim while turning left from Cedar onto Myrtle.

She reportedly was unaware of the incident, but heard something and backed up to investigate. While doind so, she backed over the victim.

State employees win back salary

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The state Supreme Court gave 220,000 state workers $207 million in retroactive pay today.

The $207 million had been approved by the Legislature in 1979 over Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr.'s veto. The lawmakers gave the workers a 7 percent pay raise retroactive to Oct. 8, 1973 from June 30, 1979. The average raise was about $500 per worker.

Brown and the Legislature had frozen state salaries for a year after passage of the Proposition 13 tax-slashing initiative in June 1978.

Tax revolt leader Howard Jarvis and Armij Brodty, a Marin County real estate agent, filed a lawsuit to block the retroactive pay increase, the first for state employees in two years.

A court of Appeal in Sacramento held that the pay boost was illegal because it was retroactive. State employees then carried the case to the Supreme Court on appeal.

The state constitution bans extra compensation for services which have already been paid for. Legislative authors of the pay raise bill sought to get around that constitutional provision by declaring that the $207 million was for continuing services.

The Supreme Court, in a 5-2 decision by Justice Stanley Mosk, said "the extra compensation clause is not offended when state employees receive retroactive salary adjustments for periods during which they work with justifiable uncertainty regarding their salary levels.

"Since we are persuaded in this case that the uncertainty was justified, we do not hesitate to uphold the Legislature's overwhelming decision to make such retroactive adjustments.

Keith Hearn, a spokesman for the California State Employees Association, heralded the decision.

"It's been a long time coming. 18 months. We're elated. It adds a little bit of sparkle to the holidays for a quarter million people," he said.

Dredging of sand OK, but not sale

By JOHN NEEDHAM
Of the Daily Pilot Staff

Orange County can dredge the sand clogging the mouth of San Juan Creek, but it can't sell it.

State coastal commissioners, for the second time, have rejected unanimously the county's plan to sell the 280,000 cubic yards of sand to offset the cost of removing it.

The commission, meeting in Los Angeles this week, refused to reconsider its October decision, which has statewide application, that says no community can sell or remove sand from beach areas. The sand must be deposited along the shoreline to prevent erosion, the commission said.

The county wants to sell the sand to the contractor who is to remove it. If this had been permitted, the dredging project to remove sand, silt and other debris left by last winter's storms would have been $40,000.

But following Tuesday's ruling it seems Orange County will be stuck with the entire $560,000 it will cost to clear the channel and deposit the sand on Doheny Beach where the creek empties into the ocean.

County and state parks officials fear that, unless the channel is dredged, heavy rains this winter could cause serious flooding in the Dana Point area.

The ruling forbidding the sale of beach sand overturns an August decision by the South Coast Regional Coastal Commission, which granted the county permission to sell the dredged sand.

In making its ruling, the regional commission said the sand would have to be redeposited along Doheny Beach only if it were economically feasible.

Once police chief

Paul H. Johnson of Laguna dies

Paul H. Johnson, a 48-year Laguna Beach resident who served as police chief of the city during World War II, died Tuesday in South Laguna at the age of 82.

Mr. Johnson, who led a tiny force of six men as they contended with rowdy servicemen on leave during the war years, died at South Coast Medical Center following an illness.

Memorial services for Mr. Johnson will be held Saturday at 10 a.m. at the Ray Family Mortuary in Laguna Beach.

Burial will be at Oahu Cemetery in Honolulu.

Born in Greenview, Ill., April 28, 1898, Mr. Johnson moved to Laguna Beach in 1922, and joined the police force in 1933.

He became chief of police in 1942 and continued in that position until 1947.

George Pletts, a retired Laguna Beach police officer who served on the force then, recalled that Johnson occasionally went out on patrol himself.

"During the war years we had more problems with servicemen than we did with the people in town," said Pletts.

"There were fights and drinking. He was more or less trying to control the attitude of the men while they were in town," he said.

"Out of all the chiefs I had, he was one of the tops. He was a very kind individual, very thoughtful," said Plett.

FORMER CHIEF DIES
Paul H. Johnson

Mr. Johnson joined the municipal water company after leaving the police force in 1947. He had worked for the city for 33 years when he retired in 1966.

He and his wife moved to Honolulu in 1970 and were in Laguna Beach visiting when he died.

Mr. Johnson is survived by his wife, Anna of Honolulu; a sister, Helen Galloway, and brothers, Don and Earl Johnson of Bloomington, Ill., and three stepchildren, John Gleed of Chicago, Diana Cox of Laguna Beach, and Geoffrey Gleed, of Laguna Niguel.

Will hostages be released by holiday?

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Prime Minister Mohammad Ali Rajai said today the United States can win release of the 52 American hostages before the Christmas holidays if Washington "can give the necessary guarantees," the official Iranian news agency reported.

Rajai apparently referred to Iran's new message, which he said outlined "financial guarantees" needed from the United States to clear the way for release of the hostages who spent their 411th day in captivity today.

A spokesman for Rajai's office said the Iranian reply has been prepared for relay to the United States by Algerian intermediaries, but that he could not confirm that the message had been given to an Algerian delegation waiting in Tehran.

A report from Tehran by the American CBS network said that Rajai handed the Algerian diplomats a briefcase today, presumably containing the response Washington was waiting to receive.

REMEMBERING THE COLONEL AT DANA POINT

Tough old bird

Colonel mourned in Dana

By ARTHUR R. VINSEL
Of the Daily Pilot Staff

Once, just two weeks ago, when ailing Col. Harland Sanders sat up in bed at Jewish Hospital in Louisville, Ky., and griped about the food, Mary Spirito and Rose Sambuco smiled, crossed their fingers and hoped.

But the chain founder of their Kentucky Fried Chicken outlet in Dana Point died Tuesday at age 90, the victim of leukemia, pneumonia and time.

He was a tough old bird, the sisters said fondly in recalling his April, 1979, visit to their family franchise.

"They told us just two weeks ago he was complaining about the hospital food," says Mrs. Spirito of Irvine, adding that the company issued regular mailgram communiques on the grand old man's condition.

"We thought he was going to make it," she added, saying the white-haired figurehead of the empire built on secret ingredients and memories of his mother's Sunday dinners had failed, then rallied before.

The sisters, retired East Coast schoolteachers who came west to go into the restaurant business, were among Col. Sanders' favorite franchisees, Mrs. Spirito explained.

Colonel Sanders had been visiting his daughter, sculptress Margaret Sanders Huenergardt in La Jolla and decided to go for a ride and visit the sisters at their Dana Point store as once promised.

"We had met him at training school," said Mrs. Spirito.

She said Sanders surprised them.

No sooner had he arrived at 34122 Coast Highway than he donned his familiar red-and-white-striped apron and took command of the spotless kitchen.

He got busy like a whirling dervish in a cloud of flour, ordering young John Sambuco to hike up the pressure cooker from 375 to 390 degrees.

And the old colonel commenced to fry up 504 pieces of chicken, using the automatic cooker he perfected when most men are in rocking chairs.

"He cooked for us from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m.," says Mrs. Spirito, adding that Colonel Sanders' cream gravy was a bit spicier than theirs because he had a liberal hand with the black pepper.

Suspect held in slaying of fast-food boss

A suspect in the execution-style slaying of a young Burger King employee in Orange last week was in custody today at Orange County Jail and investigators said a second suspect is being sought.

Orange Police Detective John Webb said Orange and Ontario law enforcement officers took Dwayne McKinney, 20, of Los Angeles, into custody Wednesday night in Ontario.

McKinney was booked on suspicion of murder and robbery.

"At this point, this is a suspicion arrest," Webb said, explaining that investigators hope to develop more substantial information in the next day or so.

McKinney is suspected of being involved in the shooting death of Burger King employee Walter H. Bell II, 19, of Santa Ana, last Thursday night during a holdup of the fast food restaurant on W. Chapman Avenue.

Bell's death had been termed a "flat execution" by detectives because he had been shot for no apparent reason after opening a vault for the gunman, who had entered the business just before closing time. Other employees had been herded into a walk-in refrigerator.

Problems remain

Strict sign law approved by SC

By STEVE MITCHELL
Of the Daily Pilot Staff

San Clemente City Council members have adopted a strict new sign ordinance, but they say they want the planning commission to find a way to eliminate the large pole signs designed to be seen from the San Diego Freeway.

The new sign document, approved after many trips back and forth from the planning commission to the council since last summer, replaces another ordinance that was never enforced.

While council members lauded the new ordinance as a means of ending visual blight in San Clemente, one council member had concerns about the document.

Councilman Bill Mecham said he opposes a section of the new law regarding freeway oriented business signs that lure motorists to food, gas and lodging from the San Diego Freeway.

Planning commissioners were unable to solve that problem, and suggested the council adopt the new sign ordinance and work on freeway signs later.

They included a section in the ordinance that permits owners of freeway oriented pole signs to keep the structures under three conditions.

The sign must have been erected prior to Sept. 1, the business must be involved in food, fuel or lodging, and the sign must be located within 1,000 feet of a freeway off-ramp.

Mecham said he wants freeway signs removed, and said the process should be included in the ordinance now, rather than be added on later, when a means of implementing the removal is found.

And while his fellow council members agreed they do not like the unsightly freeway signs, they supported the planning commission's recommendation to approve the ordinance now, then work on the problem of eliminating the pole signs.

"No one likes to see the big signs on the freeway," said Councilman Robert Limberg. "But I think the planning commission has the right idea in keeping the freeway sign district in the ordinance with the understanding they'll continue looking into it."

Planning Director Jim Lawson said removal of the freeway signs would present problems for businessmen.

The ordinance requires merchants with roof signs to remove the structures over an amortization period ranging from two to six years.

When the signs come down depends on how long they have been in existence.

The ordinance outlines the size of signs, the height of pole signs, where wall signs can be located and other regulations.

The supervisor also was successful in gaining assurances from the developer that detailed planning studies will occur prior to any development in Hobo Canyon. Riley said there are significant biological resources and natural landforms that must be protected.

The board did not address a request by the Laguna Beach City Council that no access to the Hobo Canyon development be given from streets in the Portafino neighborhood at the city's south end.

City Manager Ken Frank described those streets as "narrow, hilly and winding."

Supervisor Edison Miller, who will leave office Jan. 5, cast the sole no vote on the Local Coastal Plan for South Laguna, claiming it benefitted "two major landowners" over the interests of owners of smaller properties and residents.

Also approved by the board was the LCP for the Irvine Coast. It calls for construction of about 2,000 dwelling units on the coastal hills and bluffs near Corona del Mar at the north end of the vast Irvine Company property between that community and Laguna Beach.

The plan in essence, is identical to one approved in concept by the board earlier this year after proposals were advanced for the urban national park for lands north and east of Laguna Beach.

Also approved by the board were plans for development on small tracts of land in unincorporated territory in Laguna Canyon.

Nixon files papers suit

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former President Nixon has filed suit in an effort to retain his right to any monetary compensation he may be owed because the government has custody of his personal and presidential papers.

The suit, filed Wednesday in U.S. District Court, here was a "purely precautionary measure," said Nixon lawyer R. Stan Mortenson.

He said it was designed to protect any "rights and options in the future" that the former president may have under the 1974 Presidential Recordings and Materials Preservations Act. That act says money should be set aside to compensate a former president whose property is taken by the government.

MGM leader 'optimistic'

RENO, Nev. (AP) — The chairman of MGM Grand Hotels Inc. told a stormy stockholders meeting that insurance would be enough to handle repair costs and liability claims from the November fire at the company's Las Vegas hotel which killed 84 and injured 700.

Chairman Fred Benninger told stockholders Wednesday the company should have the hotel back in operation this summer and is "indeed optimistic about the future."

Company President Alvin Benedict said the hotel will have fire detection devices and sprinklers in all rooms when it reopens so it "will be known as the safest in the world."

City boots Santa from toy factory

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — Santa Claus has been evicted from his toy factory after chaining himself to a pillar inside to protest plans to raze the building and build a parking lot.

"Come along with us peacefully, Santa," said Douglas County Sheriff Rex Johnson as he led toymaker Bryan Anderson, dressed as Santa, from the downtown building after cutting him free Wednesday.

Anderson, whose speciality is building dollhouses, had been ordered this year to vacate the building on the north edge of the downtown district in this northeast Kansas community. The city says it needs the land for a parking lot.

Anderson, a cherubic man of 33, recruited friends to help move his woodworking tools so he could meet a Douglas County District Court order that he be out of the condemned structure by Wednesday.

He then dressed as Santa and used a heavy chain and two locks to chain himself to a pillar while City Manager Buford Watson had a writ prepared for the sheriff to evict him.

Anderson left the building peacefully, but promised to fight in the April city election against the officials responsible for the eviction order. He was not arrested.

Kids seeking cash for cans

El Morro Elementary School youngsters are collecting aluminum cans to raise money for this year's mountain trip for the Laguna Beach school's sixth graders.

Nearly $1,000 is raised each year to meet the costs of the week-long trip.

Crushed and dry aluminum cans should be delivered to the Laguna Beach campus any week day for recycling.

Toxic liquid spilled

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Thirteen paramedics were treated for exposure to insecticide after a tanker truck overturned on a hill, killing one man and covering a road for 100 yards with the highly toxic liquid.

Three farm workers on the truck were injured in the accident Wednesday. Pablo Alvarado, 19, of Oaxaca, Mexico, died of accident injuries, not exposure to the insecticide.

The paramedics were exposed to guthion 2S, an organic phosphate poison registered for use on tomato crops.

Name change?

SANTA MONICA (AP) — A move is underway to rename the Santa Monica Municipal Airport the Ronald Reagan Airport.

Principal sponsor of the name change is aviation executive Kenneth Krueger.

Krueger said recently that although Reagan lives in Pacific Palisades, he has used the airport many times since his election and will probably continue to do so during his presidency.

Gunman shot

SANTA MONICA (AP) — A 30-year-old robber who entered the beachfront home of actor Patrick O'Neal was fatally wounded with his own gun, police report.

Isaac Williams Jr., 30, of Lynwood, died Wednesday from an abdominal wound shortly after the shooting, said Detective Charles Wilson.

During the scuffle, Williams' gun was seized by Peter Dupre, who fired at Williams, Wilson said.

Flights to end?

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Due to fierce competition among international and U.S. airlines to capture the Los Angeles market, Thai Airways International has decided to suspend its flights to Los Angeles beginning next April, an executive of the airline said today.

Thai Airway's vice president for traffic, Nikorn Maneelert, said the present load factor of the Bangkok-Los Angeles route is too low to enable the carrier to break even.

Early quiz granted in Robbins case

SACRAMENTO (AP) — State Sen. Alan Robbins' prosecutor has won permission to take pretrial testimony from a girlfriend of a woman who says Robbins seduced her when she was 16.

Robbins, 37, a Van Nuys Democrat, is charged with illegal sexual conduct with three teen-age girls and possession of a small amount of marijuana. He has pleaded innocent.

On Wednesday, Superior Court Judge Benjamin Diaz granted Deputy District Attorney Albert Locher permission to take videotaped testimony from Kathy Noyes, a friend of alleged victim Lori Terwilliger.

Locher said Ms. Noyes is scheduled to leave Saturday for six months in Australia and will not be available at Robbins' trial, to start Jan. 26.

He said the testimony will be presented to jurors if Robbins is ordered to stand trial. A preliminary hearing is scheduled for Dec. 29 to determine if a trial is needed.

Ms. Noyes did not testify before the grand jury that indicted Robbins on Oct. 31, but her name was mentioned by several witnesses.

Ms. Terwilliger and one of her friends, Susan Hague, told jurors that early in 1979 Ms. Noyes accompanied them to Robbins' Sacramento apartment, where they smoked marijuana.

Ms. Terwilliger, now 18, said Robbins had given her a key, but was not present when they visited.

Radioactive waste dumping admitted

SANTA BARBARA (AP) — The federal Environmental Protection Agency has admitted that low-level radioactive waste was dumped in three deep-sea locations south of Santa Cruz Island in the 1950s and early 1960s.

Agency officials said they do not know much about the nature of the waste or the precise location of the dumps, but are investigating whether they posed health or environmental hazards.

Navigational maps published by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration indicate a "chemical munition dumping area" in the general area indicated by the EPA.

THE THREE sites indicated by the EPA range in depth from 3,600 feet to 6,000 feet and extend from six to more than 30 miles south of Santa Cruz Island.

The waste was packed in 55-gallon drums weighted with cement.

William R. Curtis, of the EPA's office of Radiation Programs, said "both the packaging and procedures previously used and the disposal of radioactive wastes at sites considered acceptable in the past would be considered substandard today."

The EPA information came in a letter to Fred Eissler of the Scenic Shoreline Preservation Conference of Santa Barbara, a citizens' group. Eissler had asked about possible nuclear waste dump sites in or near the Santa Barbara Channel.

In his reply, Curtis said EPA and NOAA are preparing a program to monitor the old offshore waste disposal sites that will include "intensive assessment efforts of past disposal practices at all sites."

CURTIS CITED an EPA report that said since most of the waste "was regarded primarily as garbage, precise records were apparently not kept of the specific locations."

The now defunct Atomic Energy Commission was in charge of civilian and military nuclear waste disposal during the period when the dumps were used.

Dry regions may get rain

By The Associated Press

A 20 percent chance of showers offers hope of breaking Northern California's long dry spell today or Friday, but the National Weather Service says the soupy haze plaguing the central and coastal valleys will linger on.

Scattered showers over the Sierra Nevada are expected to dump snow above the 9,000 foot level.

Little change of temperature is expected in most areas.

Flu epidemic looming

New LA area outbreak could get worse

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A mild influenza epidemic which has left a lot of empty desks at school and work and may have caused some deaths could grow worse in the next few weeks, health officials said.

Evidence that the influenza strain dubbed A-Bangkok-1979, so named because it was first detected in that Thailand city in late 1979, surfaced in late October when doctors at the Claremont Colleges noticed students arriving for treatment of flu-like symptoms.

"We've isolated the virus all over the county from a college age group in the San Gabriel Valley to nursing homes in the San Fernando and Gardena-Inglewood areas as well as in central Los Angeles," said Dr. Shirley Fannin, chief of acute communicable disease control at the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services.

Fannin said A-Bangkok-1979 strain is characterized by such symptoms as high fever, headaches or body aches, some sore throats and coughs. It is "rather severe" for three to five days.

"People with it are generally not able to get up and get out of bed," she said. "Very often, we see a two-week recovery period. You're not terribly ill but you feel weak. People with it get depressed and wonder if they will ever get well again. Most people will get as sick as the devil but they will recover."

The influenza strain, however, is not as acute as the Hong Kong virus that attacked Southern California residents in 1963 or the Asian flu of 1957, which by Nov. 20 of that year had killed 892 people in the United States.

Fannin said the current epidemic should peak by late January or early February and said the fact that schools will close next week for the holidays should help limit the spread of the disease.

Pet deer doomed? Many ask mercy

SACRAMENTO (AP) — A 110-pound buck deer, onee a pet, is to be put to sleep next week because state officials say it is dangerous.

The Sacramento Bee said today that pleas to save the deer were pouring into county and state offices. It said some of the callers were rangeland owners who volunteered to give the deer a home.

The deer is now in a state laboratory at Sacramento State University where it was used in a veterinarian test.

STATE DEPARTMENT of Fish and Game veterinarian David Jessup and laboratory director Howard Leach both said Wednesday that all alternatives to death had been considered. "But we haven't changed our minds," said Jessup.

The deer had been taken from Grand Island, in the Sacramento River, on Nov. 23 after reportedly butting a neighbor. It had been brought from the Sierra by a family of migrant workers, who were keeping it as a pet.

Jessup said the animal, despite his temporary lack of antlers, was determined to be capable of killing humans.

He added, "We have pictures of people being disemboweled and gored by bucks that were raised in captivity by humans. Wild deer run when they see man. But this buck has lost his fear of humans."

THE SACRAMENTO RIVER Delta warden who took in the deer, Jim Dixon, said, "If you'd seen me and several other people get butted by this deer, you'd understand. Our concern is the school children nearby waiting for a bus. When these deer lose their fear of humans, there isn't a human being who can defend himself against their strength."

Officials at Folsom Zoo considered taking the deer, but changed their minds. Zookeeper Gordon Brong said injuries from domesticated deer are more frequent than from other kinds of animals.

Before putting it to death, the DFG decided to use the deer to test a new livestock virus. The virus did not make the deer sick.

Sycamore offer could help city

The City of Laguna Beach has been offered $5,440,000 for 60 acres of Sycamore Hills — enough money to pay off most of a nearly $7 million city debt on the land.

The 522-acre Sycamore Hills parcel is located between Laguna Canyon and El Toro Roads. The 60-acre portion is off El Toro Road, adjacent to Leisure World, so most of the open space could be preserved.

The offer comes from Baywood Development Company of Newport Beach, which plans to build 296 townhomes on the property.

Council members have again delayed a negotiating deadline with Baywood to Jan. 20 to allow time to work out details of the offer.

If agreement is reached, it would go a long way toward ending a time-consuming effort by council members and officials to pay off that debt.

The city and firm have yet to concur on some provisions of the offer, but City Manager Ken Frank has said he is optimistic a deal can be made.

Among unresolved matters is a provision that if Baywood is unsuccessful in the townhouse project, the bank which loans the company construction funds would have first claim over the city on the Baywood money or the property.

The company would pay the city an additional $1.1 million if the city accepted that provision.

While it is important for the city to clear its books of the debt on Sycamore Hills, it was wise of the council to allow more time to work out details so that they are acceptable for the city.

Road battle ends

The Orange County Board of Supervisors has voted unanimously to delete Alta Laguna Boulevard in Laguna Beach from the county's master plan for arterial highways.

The vote ended a years-long battle by residents and city officials of Laguna Beach who contend extension of the road would create, in effect, a four-lane freeway through the Top of the World and Arch Beach Heights neighborhoods.

As it stands, Alta Laguna runs from Park Avenue on the west to Top of the World Drive on the east.

Had the road remained on the master plan, it eventually could have been expanded from Coast Highway to El Toro Road, cutting through the hilltop neighborhoods on the way.

The extension had first been deleted in 1974, and later was put back on the arterial map to qualify the city for county road funds.

But more recently the city began an effort to convince the county Environmental Management Agency that Laguna Beach residents don't want a "back door" entrance to the city via Alta Laguna Boulevard.

The supervisors, in deleting the road from the master plan, have helped protect the residential character of Laguna Beach's hilltop neighborhoods.

Welcome development

Talk about improbable situations — a major development proposal with communitywide support. It's happened in Dana Point.

Smyth Bros. Inc., a Newport Beach development firm, wants to build a mix of condominiums and single family homes, a hotel complex and commercial units on 76 acres overlooking the Dana Marina.

But instead of the usual community cry of traffic congestion, blighted views and population density, the project has nearly full support of the citizens, the Chamber of Commerce and organized community groups in Dana Point.

Things didn't just fall into the developer's lap — not by a long shot. Smyth Bros. has been fighting for its project, called Lantern Bay, for more than a decade.

The state of California wanted to purchase a portion of the blufftop property for a recreational vehicle park about three years ago, but the developer and the community would have none of it.

And with the defeat of Proposition 1, the state parks acquisition proposal last June, the state removed Lantern Bay from its list.

That, in turn, removed the major hurdle hindering the firm's plans, which also call for more than 30 percent of the property as open space — including a meandering public trail running the length of the blufftop.

The lone approval needed by the developer is that of the regional coastal commission, which is expected to hear the proposal in mid-March.

The unincorporated Dana Point area has long needed well-planned commercial and residential units tied by parkland and recreational areas.

The Lantern Bay project appears to fit the bill.

Boyd/Musical trick

By L.M. BOYD

Musicians learn early that they can quiet down a noisy audience simply by playing softly. You don't get that kind of racket in the concert halls, not usually. But it happens often in the Las Vegas-type clubs. And the performers need all their tricks to put in a good night's work. The harmonica whiz Larry Adler specializes in it. He manages his audience by the way he plays the instrument.

Q. How come a person's nose, as I've read, is more sensitive in the late morning and late afternoon than at other times of day?

A. Probably it's hooked up with hunger. Before lunch and dinner, your nose is primed to find the whereabouts of same. It's not all that simple, clearly, and no doubt dates all the way back to the scavenger centuries, the times of the hunters and hunted. Or that's what the experts say.

Miami now is second only to Havana worldwide in the size of its Cuban population.

Q. What's the international distress signal, if any, for an airplane downed in the wilderness?

A. Three fires about 50 feet apart in a triangle.

Civil defense efforts founder

WASHINGTON — Ronald Reagan's vice president-elect, George Bush, asserted during the primary campaign that a nuclear war was in fact winnable. But the government agency most directly responsible for safeguarding the American populace from a nuclear holocaust emphatically disagrees.

The underfunded, overlooked Federal Emergency Management Agency is charged with protection of the American people in the event that Soviet nuclear bombs start raining down on the continental United States. But a confidential FEMA report — prepared under contract by the National Governors' Association — makes clear that our preparations for civil defense can be summed up in one word: deplorable.

Indeed, Defense Department assessments cited in the FEMA report estimate that, in our present state of civil defense disarray, "some 160 million people would be killed by an attack." The Pentagon didn't even try to guess what additional injuries would be sustained by those who survived an enemy nuclear strike.

MEANWHILE, of course, our intelligence agencies report that the Soviet Union has intensified its efforts in recent years to improve its civil defense program. And as FEMA has learned in its unsuccessful efforts to get support for its programs, critics insist that an adequate civil defense setup can lead the military to think the unthinkable — that nuclear war is a reasonable option.

"There is a general overestimation by the American public about national civil defense planning and funding," the FEMA report states, adding: "National policy has been equivocal, and guidance from the federal level has been negligible."

In particular, the document discloses an appalling lack of cooperation between Washington and the 50 state governments, which are ultimately responsible for the safety of the public in a nuclear attack.

"Governors and citizens trust that the federal government is planning for the major programs dealing with an attack," the secret report notes, adding bluntly: "That is a delusion."

Here are some of the basic problems perceived by the civil defense agency:

— POPULATION relocation. The primary method envisioned so far by our planners to save lives in case of enemy attack is the movement of huge numbers of people from target areas — what FEMA calls "Crisis Relocation Planning." The trouble is that many of the state officials who would have to carry out this logistical nightmare have concluded simply that it won't work.

— Communications. "Governors in general do not know how they will be notified if an attack is imminent," the report states. "Will there be individual telephone calls from the president? From the Department of Defense? From FEMA?" Many governors don't even have the security clearance that would entitle them to the latest intelligence estimates. They might — like ordinary citizens — have to depend on the media for their information.

— "CONTINUITY of leadership." Preparation of self-sufficient emergency centers for local and national leaders is viewed as a necessity by the civil defense planners. There are thousands of these "emergency operating centers" now in existence, dating back to the days following the Cuban missile crisis in 1962. These centers should be blast-resistant and equipped with reliable communications systems. But the FEMA report found that most of these centers are in pitiful condition, and would be useless in the event of nuclear attack.

GATHERING NUTS: Throughout its history, the Federal Bureau of Investigation has had to keep tabs on an incredible number of cuckoos, and until his death in 1972 Director J. Edgar Hoover wanted to be kept informed on all of them.

One far-out organization that drew the FBI's — and Hoover's — attention was the "Silver Shirts of America," a Nazi-like group founded by one William Pelley in Asheville, N.C. Anti-Semitic and anti-communist, it flourished in the 1930s and numbered thousands of adherents. Pelley made a comfortable living writing publications and selling uniforms.

According to a "personal and confidential" letter to Hoover from the Charlotte, N.C., FBI office in the early 1930s, an unidentified Oregonian had received a visionary "ray of light" some years previously, predicting that "first, a great national figure would (die) in a seeming air accident; second, a powerful figure in politics would be assassinated; third, a man would come forth and boldly enter the lists on a platform of Christ and the Constitution."

The first predictions conceivably came true: Humorist Will Rogers died in a plane crash in August 1935, and Sen. Huey Long was assassinated a month later.

Pelley, of course, viewed himself as the third man in the prediction. He died in the 1960s, still under J. Edgar Hoover's watchful eye.

Who is responsible for all the killing?

To the Editor:

The controversy goes on — who is responsible for the deaths of: King, Kennedy and now Lennon? You must also include all the small children who on their way home from school, get murdered for no obvious reason.

There is no "obvious" or public mourning for Lisa Rosales. Only her family are lighting candles, and they are not marching down the Sunset Strip or playing Beatles' records. They are just heartbroken that someone would destroy a beautiful 7-year-old, a beautiful Black leader, a wonderful President.

Where does this all end? Who will take the responsibility for all this decadence? Will taking away guns from the public do it? (Doubtful).

Legislation is only effective with law-abiding citizens; what about the other faction? They get seven years at our expense and are released to repeat their previous errors.

So who is responsible for all this? I guess we are — would you believe?

Applause

To the Editor:

Re The Associated Press article titled "Man's for Animals," dated Sunday, Dec. 14, I would like to give a good round of applause for Michael Fox.

His enlightened attitude on the treatment of animals in this country, especially those used for human consumption, i.e. veal calves, chickens and swine, is one with which I can highly identify.

He is neither a vegetarian nor an antivivisectionist, but a humane, compassionate veterinarian.

Long may his banner wave!

Misinformation

To the Editor:

With the death last week of John Lennon, who led, perhaps, the most public life of any man of the last 20 years, we were indeed shocked by the number of factual errors made by the news media regarding his life and career. For example:

— Several writers have cited the lyrics "the dream is over" (from Lennon's 1970 album "Plastic Ono Band") to sum up his death, incorrectly referring to it as a song title. The song in which those lyrics appeared was titled "God."

— Cleave Herman, of KFWB radio, identified Paul McCartney as the Beatles' lead guitarist and George Harrison as their bassist. The reverse is true.

— CBS News identified George Martin as the manager of the Beatles. He was their producer.

Obviously, John Lennon should not be made out to be more than he actually was. (The rock press will undoubtedly be calling him a god.) However, he was in fact a great musician, composer, and tireless worker for peace and social justice. He cared about us. We only wish that the people reporting his death would have cared enough about him to chronicle his life accurately.

Gun laws

To the Editor:

Having just read your Dec. 10 editorial on "Guns Still Killing," I got a little mad. I wondered if you or your paper were aware of some of the following facts. First, all guns are registered with the federal government and have been for almost 12 years. (1968 Federal Gun Control Act.)

However, when it comes to handguns, they are registered with both the state and federal governments. The state of California has a 15-day mandatory waiting period on the purchase of a handgun, from the time of purchase to the time a person can pick up the gun.

DURING THIS time each person is run through the C.I.& I. (Criminal Identification and Investigation) computers in Sacramento to make it legal for him or her to purchase a handgun. The buyer must be able to pass both state and federal questions before being able to purchase and pick up (after 15 days) a handgun.

Also, any person who buys two or more handguns in a seven-day period has his or her name sent to the local federal A.T.F. (Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms) office. When any person purchases a handgun a copy of the state form is sent to that person's chief of police in the city or town they live in. At the present time, the state of California has on its books a law that makes it a five-year jail sentence if a handgun is used in the committing of a crime. This law or jail sentence is one of the first things thrown out by our liberal judges when a criminal who has used a handgun in a crime comes up before them. It's called plea bargaining.

Please, we have more than enough laws on the books at the present time; let's just enforce them. I feel just as bad as the next person when there are needless murders and killings, but I don't think more legislation is the answer. I feel we have a problem in the courts and the criminal justice system. Let's work on them.

Dial-A-Ride

To the Editor:

For years Laguna Beach city councils have promised to help senior citizens who live on fixed incomes and need all kinds of help, especially housing.

They also promised to help on such issues as Dial-A-Ride, but the campaign pledges of candidates were completely forgotten once they became council members.

Bear in mind that Dial-A-Ride costs are about $15,000 per year. With about 5,000 senior citizens (about 25 percent of the Laguna Beach area population) the cost would be about $3 per person per year, or about 25 cents a month — or about the price of half a cup of coffee in a Laguna Beach restaurant. And the program probably would become self-supporting once it is functioning.

Et cetera

To the Editor:

Here's another example of a frequently mispronounced expression I refer to the much maligned "etc." The unenlightened insist on saying "EK CETERA." Maybe this is a byproduct of the widespread elimination of the study of Latin in our educational establishment.

Any first-year student of Latin will know that the letters "etc" stand for the words ET CETERA. ET is Latin for AND and CETERA translates literally OTHERS. It is simply AND OTHERS.

The satisfaction derived from using the correct pronunciation was demonstrated some years ago by a popular talk show host on KYW Philadelphia. The day after I wrote him a note on the subject he had occasion to use the expression and he fairly shouted ET CETERA! with a feeling of elation. What's more he repeated the words twice more!

Try it sometime. Simply say ET CETERA! It's a great feeling!

Flag disgraced

To the Editor:

We were told at Louisiana Pacific on Bristol Street in Costa Mesa that their flag was at half mast for John Lennon!

This is a disgrace to our flag and our country and all the noble loyal citizens who put their lives on the line every day for America and her people.

I called the store and the general office and was informed that he was a national hero to some people. What a sick society — I knew it was bad, but this disgrace to our flag tops it.

Industry heads for robot era

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A robot that can tell the difference between a 2-inch screw and a 3-inch bolt and decide what to do with them makes a better worker than a robot that balks when anything but the bolt comes down the assembly line.

Development of such a "smart robot" is the aim of 30 scientists and engineers at Carnegie-Mellon University's new Robotics Institute, who hope their research will create the footsoldiers of the robotics revolution now sweeping industry.

"In a nutshell, we are trying to put artificial intelligence in robots," said Dr. Angel Jordan, dean of CMU's Carnegie Institute of Technology.

"CURRENT ROBOTS ARE nothing more than mechanisms that are programmed to do certain tasks in repetition. We want to add an element of artificial intelligence so they can make decisions or cope with changes," Jordan said in a recent interview.

A major project already under way is the development of robot systems for a "factory of the future" that have both human and robot workers.

But your future neighbor in this future factory won't look like the stumpy R2-D2 of "Star Wars." Industrial robots in CMU's labs instead are mechanical arms of varying degrees of flexibility, linked to computer "brains." Jordan said the new robots will have a sense of touch and what amounts to three-dimensional vision.

THE ROBOTICS INSTITUTE officially will open Dec. 9 with a seminar and a half-dozen robot demonstrations, said the institute director, Dr. Raj Reddy.

CMU President Richard Cyert said one big goal of the new institute is to develop robot systems equal to or better than those of the Japanese, who are the current world leaders.

The Japanese claim a total 30,000 robots in their factories. At the Zama factory of Nissan Motor Co., one of the most automated in the world, 96.4 percent of the body parts of Datsun cars are welded by robots performing in military-like precision.

INTRODUCTION OF ROBOTS into U.S. factories has been slow, despite initial claims of increased productivity, reduced errors and lower labor costs. About 4,500 robots are in use in the nation today, according to an official at Unimation Inc., a robot manufacturer.

The need to boost productivity in American factories is a big factor behind the push toward smarter robots.

"As a country we must increase productivity," said Cyert. "The robots look like a major factor in developing such increases."

CYERT SAID HE BELIEVES the economy of the future will create new jobs faster than the labor force can grow. Robots can take up the slack, he said.

Besides stepping into mill jobs, robots could be developed for hazardous jobs such as coal mining and nuclear work.

Tony Massaro, director of the robotics technology division of the Westinghouse Electric Corp., said robots already are moving into some of their least desirable factory jobs, such as spray painting and material handling.

Westinghouse has 30 robots working in its plants and plans to expand the force to 200 by the end of next year, he said.

Black Christmas

Shack town loses power

THREE ROCKS (AP) — There aren't any festive Christmas lights for families living on an 11-acre parcel in this small western Fresno County community.

In fact, there aren't any lights of any kind because there is no electricity.

Power to most of the mobile homes and shacks in the poverty-ridden area was shut off in May for health and safety violations cited by the county. Water and sewage systems were declared inadequate, and some electrical hookups consisted simply of unsafe power cords run between buildings, officials said.

"THESE CHILDREN suffered all summer," said Dorothy Bailay, a 12-year resident and one of the few with electricity. "At Thanksgiving, they didn't have anything to be thankful about."

If it weren't for the children's paper decorations, passersby would see no signs of Christmas approaching.

The county has arranged to relocate the families to new homes with adequate sewage, water and electrical hookups at Cantua Creek east of here, but moving day is not planned until February or March. Meanwhile, nine people from two families crowd into one trailer.

"THEY'RE GOING to have to stay in these bleak surroundings without any lights, without any hope, without anything," Ms. Bailey said. "Most of these people won't have nothing."

With the cotton harvest over, work is hard to find and usually lasts only a few days a month.

Raquel Carbajal, 16, remains optimistic about borrowing money to buy a toy car for her son Genero's second Christmas and a doll for his baby sister.

Rosa Mendoza, 19, who shares a trailer with the Carbajals, hopes to buy presents for her children in the new year.

BUT ELIZABETH Rocha, 18, admits she's depressed.

"If there's not going to be any decorations, what's the use?" she asked. "Without a Christmas tree or anything else, there's no use, no use."

She even avoids trips to nearby towns because seeing holiday decorations hurts too much.

Ms. Bailey is hoping for outside help.

Others plan to make the best of things, Sara Longoria, a mother of four, is adamant about decorating even without Christmas lights.

"The children are going to have a Christmas," she declared.

Favoritism charged in adoptions

OAKLAND (AP) — Several black organizations are pushing Alameda County to reveal confidential adoption procedures following complaints that white families have been favored over black for adoption of black children.

Members of several groups say they plan to meet with county Social Services Agency officials Jan. 10 to discuss the issue.

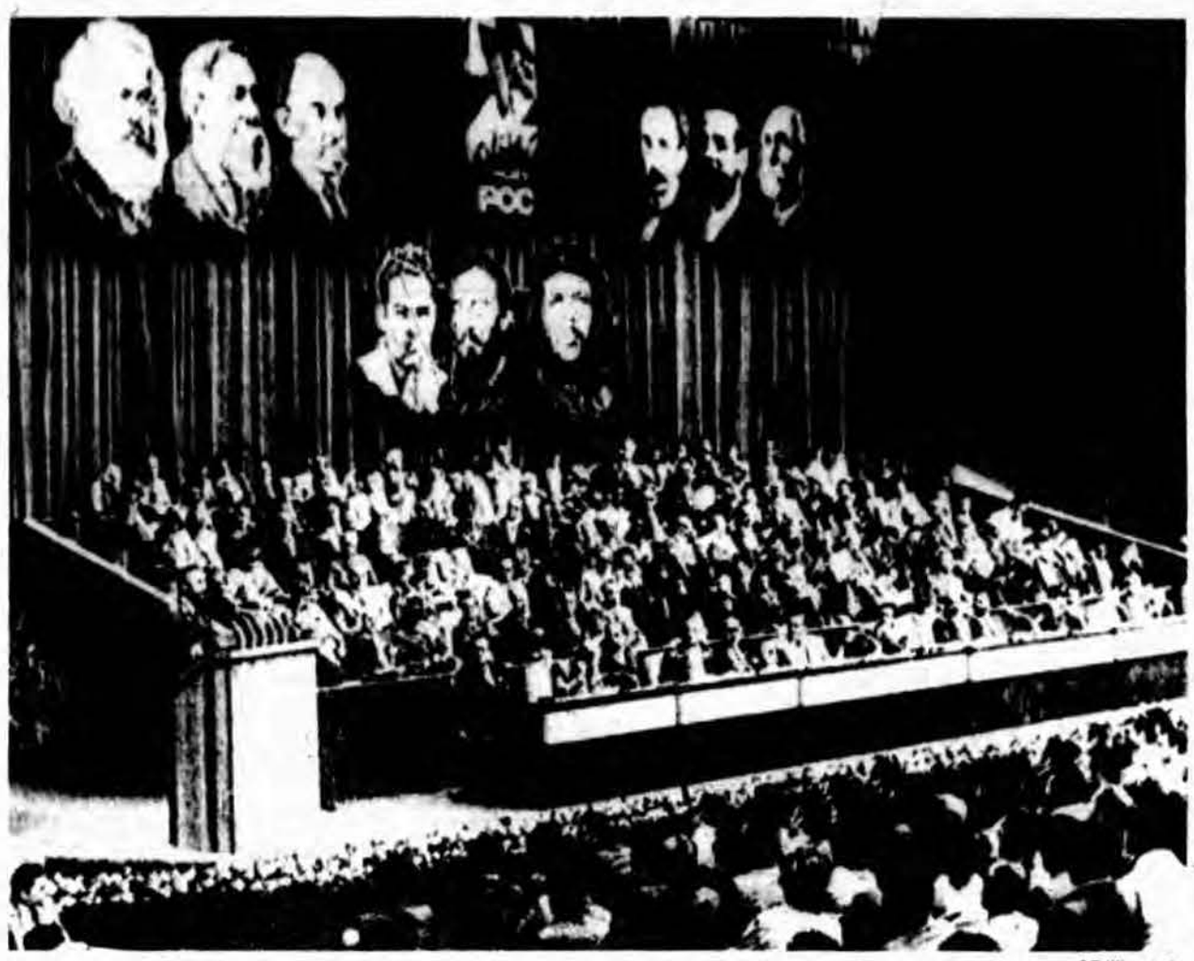

"AS A PUBLIC agency, it should be accountable for decisions it makes regarding the lives of black children," said Alice Washington, a spokeswoman for Advocates for Black Children.

She complained that county officials refused to discuss the case of a 4-year-old black child allegedly placed with a white, male, single parent.

"Black families from other adoption agencies were rejected because race is not seen by the agency as a significant factor in choosing families for black children," Washington said.

SOCIAL SERVICES Agency spokeswoman Julie Shukraft said she could not confirm or deny the adoption story, but she denied race is ignored in choosing families.

"Race is not seen by the agency as the only significant criterion," she added. "We look at the whole milieu of needs."

Ruling on kidnap opposed

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The state Supreme Court has been asked to overturn an appeals court decision that could result in the parole of two men convicted in the ransom kidnapping of a busload of Chowchilla school children some four years ago.

The Court of Appeal unanimously upheld the conviction and life sentences, but it voted 2-1 on November 4 to throw out a finding that the victims suffered "bodily harm."

That finding had meant no chance of parole for James Schoenfeld, 28, of Atherton, and Frederick Newhall Woods, 28, of Woodside. Schoenfeld's brother, Richard, 27, was convicted under the youthful offender act and thus was eligible for parole.

They were charged with kidnapping 26 school children from Chowchilla and their bus driver on July 15, 1976 and taking them to a Livermore quarry and burying them alive in a moving van.

The victims dug their way out after 27 hours in captivity and 16 hours in the van.

Father mutilated; police seeking son

MOUNTAIN VIEW (AP) — Police sought a young man for questioning after discovering the body of his 50-year-old father strangled, stabbed, beaten and hacked to pieces.

Police wanted to question Andrew Bryan Watts, 24, after the body of his father, Paul Watts, 50, was found Monday in a bedroom of the father's home.

The son lived with the parents but authorities said they did not know his whereabouts, although they noted he had relatives in Sacramento and Utah.

The body was found by the elder Watts wife in a second floor bedroom of their townhouse.

Watts' legs had been hacked off, he had been stabbed more than 20 times, his face was beaten and a necktie was knotted tightly around his throat, according to a Santa Clara County coroner's report.

The legs were in a garbage bag and a garbage bag filled with sugar was over his head. A machete and a seven-inch kitchen knife were found near the body.

Mrs. Watts told authorities her son had recently been released from a treatment facility, but she had wanted him to return to the facility because he had been having nightmares.

Border port loss hit

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The quiet defeat of a new U.S.-Mexican border crossing bill by Congress has brought expressions of regret in both countries.

An appropriations bill amendment to finance the Otay Mesa port of entry was dropped during House-Senate wrangling Monday night over spending for federal agencies.

House conferees agreed to its $12.1 million cost last Friday as one of 140 Senate amendments to the appropriations bill.

THE PORT WAS proposed five miles east of the world's busiest port of entry at San Ysidro after almost 20 years of discussions between Baja California and San Diego County authorities. Rep. Lionel Van Deerlin, D-Calif., began pressing for it 15 years ago.

Van Deerlin lost a re-election bid last month.

"All government agencies on both sides of the border are disappointed," said Tom Welsh, U.S. Customs chief inspector at San Ysidro. "We think the Otay Mesa crossing is really needed."

Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo said he wanted to attend a ceremony marking the opening of the port, expected in mid-1983.

In Tijuana and other Baja cities, businessmen trying to encourage U.S. tourists have pushed for another full-time port of entry for years.

Spokesmen said San Diego County supervisors also were unhappy.

The Otay Mesa facility would have provided eight traffic lanes for fast entry 24 hours a day, plus 24 lanes for vehicles requiring inspection and two bus lanes. There are 24 lanes at San Ysidro, but that crossing is so crowded that weekend motorists often wait for hours to get through.

There is a third 24-hour port of entry in California, an eight-lane facility at Calexico.

In addition, there are small stations open part time at Tecate, 40 miles east of San Ysidro, and Andrade, near the Arizona line 50 miles east of Calexico.

ABC still the silliest

EDITOR'S NOTE — AP Television Writer Peter Boyer has to watch a lot of television, and sometimes it gets a little silly — the programming, that is. In this column, he imagines a Coalition on Television Silliness that takes stock of the phenomenon.

By PETER J. BOYER

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Coalition on Television Silliness, a little-known watchdog organization based in Eagle Rock, has named ABC the No. 1 network in TV silliness for 1980. NBC finished a close second, followed by CBS.

For the third consecutive year, ABC's "Laverne and Shirley" was named silliest series, with an average of eight minutes of unredeeming silliness per episode.

The coalition was founded five years ago by Dr. Noroan S. Neer, a local psychiatrist and consumer activist. In announcing this year's survey, Neer said:

"The documented dangers of televised silliness are shocking. From specific triggering of imitative behavior to broader effects on our nation's moral fiber, reasonable people can no longer ignore the harmful effects of massive amounts of televised silliness."

The "Silliest TV Genre" of 1980 was the celebrity competition show, ranging from "Battle of Network Stars" to "City vs. Country Showdown." Silliest of these, Neer says, was a recent NBC entry called "Battle of Beverly Hills."

"This program logged 94 minutes of pure silly," says Neer, "and it was only a 97-minute show.

Toxic liquid spilled

SAN DIEGO (AP) Thirteen paramedics were treated for exposure to insecticide after a tanker truck overturned on a hill, killing one man and covering a road for 100 yards with the highly toxic liquid.

Three farm workers on the truck were injured in the accident Wednesday. Pablo Alvarado, 19, of Oaxaca, Mexico, died of accident injuries, not exposure to the insecticide.

The paramedics were exposed to guthion 2S, an organic phosphate poison registered for use on tomato crops.

Bomb claimed

LOS ANGELES (AP) A group calling itself the "Croatian Liberation Army" is claiming responsibility for leaving a dynamite bomb at the San Pedro home of a city transportation commissioner. The device was safely detonated by police.

Commissioner Joseph Zaninovich said he was leaving for work Wednesday morning when he was alerted to a plastic bag on the porch because his dog was barking. He found six sticks of dynamite and a timing device when he peeked inside.

SANTA MONICA (AP) A 30-year-old robber who entered the beachfront home of actor Patrick O'Neal was fatally wounded with his own gun, police report.

Isaac Williams Jr., 30, of Lynwood, died Wednesday from an abdominal wound shortly after the shooting, said Detective Charles Wilson.

During the scuffle, Williams' gun was seized by Peter Dupre, who fired at Williams, Wilson said.

Flights to end?

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) Due to fierce competition among international and U.S. airlines to capture the Los Angeles market, Thai Airways International has decided to suspend its flights to Los Angeles beginning next April, an executive of the airline said today.

Thai Airway's vice president for traffic, Nikorn Maneelert, said the present load factor of the Bangkok-Los Angeles route is too low to enable the carrier to break even.

Early quiz granted in Robbins case

SACRAMENTO (AP) State Sen. Alan Robbins' prosecutor has won permission to take pretrial testimony from a girlfriend of a woman who says Robbins seduced her when she was 16.

Robbins, 37, a Van Nuys Democrat, is charged with illegal sexual conduct with three teen-age girls and possession of a small amount of marijuana. He has pleaded innocent.

On Wednesday, Superior Court Judge Benjamin Diaz granted Deputy District Attorney Albert Locher permission to take videotaped testimony from Kathy Noyes, a friend of alleged victim Lori Terwilliger.

Locher said Ms. Noyes is scheduled to leave Saturday for six months in Australia and will not be available at Robbins' trial, to start Jan. 26.

He said the testimony will be presented to jurors if Robbins is ordered to stand trial. A preliminary hearing is scheduled for Dec. 29 to determine if a trial is needed.

Ms. Noyes did not testify before the grand jury that indicted Robbins on Oct. 31, but her name was mentioned by several witnesses.

Ms. Terwilliger and one of her friends, Susan Hague, told jurors that early in 1979 Ms. Noyes accompanied them to Robbins' Sacramento apartment, where they smoked marijuana.

Ms. Terwilliger, now 18, said Robbins had given her a key, but was not present when they visited.

Radioactive waste dumping admitted

SANTA BARBARA (AP) — The federal Environmental Protection Agency has admitted that low-level radioactive waste was dumped in three deep-sea locations south of Santa Cruz Island in the 1950s and early 1960s.

Agency officials said they do not know much about the nature of the waste or the precise location of the dumps, but are investigating whether they posed health or environmental hazards.

Navigational maps published by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration indicate a "chemical munition dumping area" in the general area indicated by the EPA.

THE THREE sites indicated by the EPA range in depth from 3,600 feet to 6,000 feet and extend from six to more than 30 miles south of Santa Cruz Island.

The waste was packed in 55-gallon drums weighted with cement.

William R. Curtis, of the EPA's office of Radiation Programs, said "both the packaging and procedures previously used and the disposal of radioactive wastes at sites considered acceptable in the past would be considered substandard today."

The EPA information came in a letter to Fred Eissler of the Scenic Shoreline Preservation Conference of Santa Barbara, a citizens' group. Eissler had asked about possible nuclear waste dump sites in or near the Santa Barbara Channel.

In his reply, Curtis said EPA and NOAA are preparing a program to monitor the old offshore waste disposal sites that will include "intensive assessment efforts of past disposal practices at all sites."

CURTIS CITED an EPA report that said since most of the waste "was regarded primarily as garbage, precise records were apparently not kept of the specific locations."

The now-defunct Atomic Energy Commission was in charge of civilian and military nuclear waste disposal during the period when the dumps were used.

Dry regions may get rain

By The Associated Press

A 20 percent chance of showers offers hope of breaking Northern California's long dry spell today or Friday, but the National Weather Service says the soupy haze plaguing the central and coastal valleys will linger on.

Scattered showers over the Sierra Nevada are expected to dump snow above the 9,000 foot level.

Little change of temperature is expected in most areas.

Flu epidemic looming

New LA area outbreak could get worse

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A mild influenza epidemic which has left a lot of empty desks at school and work and may have caused some deaths could grow worse in the next few weeks, health officials said.

Evidence that the influenza strain dubbed A-Bangkok-1979, so named because it was first detected in that Thailand city in late 1979, surfaced in late October when doctors at the Claremont Colleges noticed students arriving for treatment of flu-like symptoms.

"We've isolated the virus all over the county from a college-age group in the San Gabriel Valley to nursing homes in the San Fernando and Gardena-Inglewood areas as well as in central Los Angeles," said Dr. Shirley Fannin, chief of acute communicable disease control at the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services.

Fannin said A-Bangkok-1979 strain is characterized by such symptoms as high fever, headaches or body aches, some sore throats and coughs. It is "rather severe" for three to five days.

"People with it are generally not able to get up and get out of bed," she said. "Very often, we see a two-week recovery period. You're not terribly ill but you feel weak. People with it get depressed and wonder if they will ever get well again. Most people will get as sick as the devil but they will recover."

The influenza strain, however, is not as acute as the Hong Kong virus that attacked Southern California residents in 1963 or the Asian flu of 1957, which by Nov. 20 of that year had killed 892 people in the United States.

Fannin said the current epidemic should peak by late January or early February and said the fact that schools will close next week for the holidays should help limit the spread of the disease.

Pet deer doomed? Many ask mercy

SACRAMENTO (AP) — A 110-pound buck deer, once a pet, is to be put to sleep next week because state officials say it is dangerous.

The Sacramento Bee said today that pleas to save the deer were pouring into county and state offices. It said some of the callers were rangeland owners who volunteered to give the deer a home.

The deer is now in a state laboratory at Sacramento State University where it was used in a veterinarian test.

STATE DEPARTMENT of Fish and Game veterinarian David Jessup and laboratory director Howard Leach both said Wednesday that all alternatives to death had been considered. "But we haven't changed our minds," said Jessup.

The deer had been taken from Grand Island, in the Sacramento River, on Nov. 23 after reportedly butting a neighbor. It had been brought from the Sierra by a family of migrant workers, who were keeping it as a pet.

Jessup said the animal, despite his temporary lack of antlers, was determined to be capable of killing humans.

He added, "We have pictures of people being disemboweled and gored by bucks that were raised in captivity by humans. Wild deer run when they see man. But this buck has lost his fear of humans."

THE SACRAMENTO RIVER Delta warden who took in the deer, Jim Dixon, said, "If you'd seen me and several other people get butted by this deer, you'd understand. Our concern is the school children nearby waiting for a bus. When these deer lose their fear of humans, there isn't a human being who can defend himself against their strength."

Officials at Folsom Zoo considered taking the deer, but changed their minds. Zookeeper Gordon Brong said injuries from domesticated deer are more frequent than from other kinds of animals.

Before putting it to death, the DFG decided to use the deer to test a new livestock virus. The virus did not make the deer sick.

Smooth sailing for development

In most cities, a building proposal calling for the construction of 1,800 residential units would create quite a stir. In Irvine, it's par for the course.

Such a proposal is now quietly and routinely winding its way through the municipal review process. The planned development is the last phase of Irvine's Woodbridge Village, a community that will have a 1985 population of 27,000.

The Irvine Company, which owns the overwhelming majority of land in Irvine, is — of course — developing Woodbridge.

Woodbridge's last phase is to be considered by Irvine's Planning, Transportation and Community Services commissions. And if the preceding phases of Woodbridge are any indication, the final phase of the village will sail through the city's developmental review process without a hitch.

The Irvine City Council on Aug. 13, 1974, approved zoning for the entire Woodbridge Village. Since then, large developmental approvals for Woodbridge have been routinely handled at the city commission level.

Orange County's building community is constantly blaming governmental red tape for stifling development of an adequate supply of housing. This argument certainly shouldn't be applied to Woodbridge, a community bigger than some California cities, a community given overall approval by one vote of the City Council.

Moreover, the City of Irvine in general didn't get to be the fastest growing city of its size in California by having a City Council that dragged its feet on development requests.

Advice premature

University Drive is a roadway with two ends and no middle. One end deadends on the Irvine side of Upper Newport Bay. The other deadends on the opposite side of the bay.

For years, University has been envisioned as a needed link between Irvine and Costa Mesa, cutting across the top of the bay, and as such it has been shown on city and county master plans.

Now state Coastal Commission planners have recommended — in a somewhat sweeping gesture — that the long-planned but much-delayed road should not be completed.

Further, the state planners say the thoroughfare should be left off circulation maps in the proposed Newport Beach Local Coastal Plan.

Three years ago, Newport council members fought over whether an environmental study of the proposed connection should be undertaken.

The council opted to skip that study, yielding to environmentalists who argued the road would disrupt wildlife and plant life in the bay area.

The coastal commission, in its directive to the city of Newport Beach, contends the same thing.

But without the environmental study that went down the tubes three years ago, it has never been established that completion of University Drive would hurt either birds or plants.

This has been the problem with the University plan all along — city and county agencies have never been allowed to get even to first base.

Too bad the coastal commission can't hold off on its rapid-fire suggestions until the facts are known.

City puts on dog

Irvine city officials say design work is to begin early next year on a $2.9 million animal facility — a dog pound if you will — to be built in East Irvine.

Municipal employees prefer to call the proposed project an "animal control facility." Maybe they think the fancy name will make its staggering price tag easier for the taxpayers to swallow.

Similarly, design work has already begun on a $3.5 million maintenance yard to be built adjacent to the dog pound. City administrators call this one an "operations support facility."

To the layman, the expense of such projects seems astronomical. It may be, however, that land, material and construction costs have been inflated to the point where these price tags are in line. It may also be that these facilities must be very large and well designed in order to adequately serve fast-growing Irvine.

But the question that should be foremost in the minds of city officials should be, "Who is going to pay for them?"

This question should be given at least as much thought as is now being given to the design of the facilities.

This situation seems to be one in which the city is putting its animal carts before the horse.

Boyd/Musical trick

By L.M. BOYD

Musicians learn early that they can quiet down a noisy audience simply by playing softly. You don't get that kind of racket in the concert halls, not usually. But it happens often in the Las Vegas-type clubs. And the performers need all their tricks to put in a good night's work. The harmonica whiz Larry Adler specializes in it. He manages his audience by the way he plays the instrument.

Q. How come a person's nose, as I've read, is more sensitive in the late morning and late afternoon than at other times of day?

A. Probably it's hooked up with hunger. Before lunch and dinner, your nose is primed to find the whereabouts of same. It's not all that simple, clearly, and no doubt dates all the way back to the scavenger centuries, the times of the hunters and hunted. Or that's what the experts say.

Miami now is second only to Havana worldwide in the size of its Cuban population.

Q. What's the international distress signal, if any, for an airplane downed in the wilderness?

A. Three fires about 50 feet apart in a triangle.

Civil defense efforts founder

WASHINGTON — Ronald Reagan's vice president-elect, George Bush, asserted during the primary campaign that a nuclear war was in fact winnable. But the government agency most directly responsible for safeguarding the American populace from a nuclear holocaust emphatically disagrees.

The underfunded, overlooked Federal Emergency Management Agency is charged with protection of the American people in the event that Soviet nuclear bombs start raining down on the continental United States. But a confidential FEMA report — prepared under contract by the National Governors' Association — makes clear that our preparations for civil defense can be summed up in one word: deplorable.

Indeed, Defense Department assessments cited in the FEMA report estimate that, in our present state of civil defense disarray, "some 160 million people would be killed by an attack." The Pentagon didn't even try to guess what additional injuries would be sustained by those who survived an enemy nuclear strike.

MEANWHILE, of course, our intelligence agencies report that the Soviet Union has intensified its efforts in recent years to improve its civil defense program. And as FEMA has learned in its unsuccessful efforts to get support for its programs, critics insist that an adequate civil defense setup can lead the military to think the unthinkable — that nuclear war is a reasonable option.

"There is a general overestimation by the American public about national civil defense planning and funding," the FEMA report states, adding: "National policy has been equivocal, and guidance from the federal level has been negligible."

In particular, the document discloses an appalling lack of cooperation between Washington and the 50 state governments, which are ultimately responsible for the safety of the public in a nuclear attack.

"Governors and citizens trust that the federal government is planning for the major programs dealing with an attack," the secret report notes, adding bluntly: "That is a delusion."

Here are some of the basic problems perceived by the civil defense agency:

— POPULATION relocation. The primary method envisioned so far by our planners to save lives in case of enemy attack is the movement of huge numbers of people from target areas — what FEMA calls "Crisis Relocation Planning." The trouble is that many of the state officials who would have to carry out this logistical nightmare have concluded simply that it won't work.

— Communications. "Governors in general do not know how they will be notified if an attack is imminent," the report states. "Will there be individual telephone calls from the president? From the Department of Defense? From FEMA?" Many governors don't even have the security clearance that would entitle them to the latest intelligence estimates. They might — like ordinary citizens — have to depend on the media for their information.

— "CONTINUITY of leadership." Preparation of self-sufficient emergency centers for local and national leaders is viewed as a necessity by the civil defense planners. There are thousands of these "emergency operating centers" now in existence, dating back to the days following the Cuban missile crisis in 1962. These centers should be blast-resistant and equipped with reliable communications systems. But the FEMA report found that most of these centers are in pitiful condition, and would be useless in the event of nuclear attack.

GATHERING NUTS: Throughout its history, the Federal Bureau of Investigation has had to keep tabs on an incredible number of cuckoos, and until his death in 1972 Director J. Edgar Hoover wanted to be kept informed on all of them.

One far-out organization that drew the FBI's — and Hoover's — attention was the "Silver Shirts of America," a Nazi-like group founded by one William Pelley in Asheville, N.C. Anti-Semitic and anti-communist, it flourished in the 1930s and numbered thousands of adherents. Pelley made a comfortable living writing publications and selling uniforms.

According to a "personal and confidential" letter to Hoover from the Charlotte, N.C., FBI office in the early 1930s, an unidentified Oregonian had received a visionary "ray of light" some years previously, predicting that "first, a great national figure would (die) in a seeming air accident; second, a powerful figure in politics would be assassinated; third, a man would come forth and boldly enter the lists on a platform of Christ and the Constitution."

The first predictions conceivably came true. Humorist Will Rogers died in a plane crash in August 1935, and Sen. Huey Long was assassinated a month later.

Pelley, of course, viewed himself as the third man in the prediction. He died in the 1960s, still under J. Edgar Hoover's watchful eye.

Who is responsible for all the killing?

To the Editor:

The controversy goes on — who is responsible for the deaths of: King, Kennedy and now Lennon? You must also include all the small children who on their way home from school, get murdered for no obvious reason.

There is no "obvious" or public mourning for Lisa Rosales. Only her family are lighting candles, and they are not marching down the Sunset Strip or playing Beatles' records. They are just heartbroken that someone would destroy a beautiful 7-year-old, a beautiful Black leader, a wonderful President.

Where does this all end? Who will take the responsibility for all this decadence? Will taking away guns from the public do it? (Doubtful).

Legislation is only effective with law-abiding citizens; what about the other faction? They get seven years at our expense and are released to repeat their previous errors.

So who is responsible for all this? I guess we are — would you believe?

Applause

To the Editor:

Re The Associated Press article titled "Man's for Animals," dated Sunday, Dec. 14, I would like to give a good round of applause for Michael Fox.

His enlightened attitude on the treatment of animals in this country, especially those used for human consumption, i.e. veal calves, chickens and swine, is one with which I can highly identify.

He is neither a vegetarian nor an antivivisectionist, but a humane, compassionate veterinarian.

Long may his banner wave!

MYRNA YOUNG

Misinformation

To the Editor:

With the death last week of John Lennon, who led, perhaps, the most public life of any man of the last 20 years, we were indeed shocked by the number of factual errors made by the news media regarding his life and career. For example:

— Several writers have cited the lyrics "the dream is over" (from Lennon's 1970 album "Plastic Ono Band") to sum up his death, incorrectly referring to it as a song title. The song in which those lyrics appeared was titled "God."

— Cleave Herman, of KFWB radio, identified Paul McCartney as the Beatles' lead guitarist and George Harrison as their bassist. The reverse is true.

— CBS News identified George Martin as the manager of the Beatles. He was their producer.

Obviously, John Lennon should not be made out to be more than he actually was. (The rock press will undoubtedly be calling him a god.) However, he was in fact a great musician, composer, and tireless worker for peace and social justice. He cared about us. We only wish that the people reporting his death would have cared enough about him to chronicle his life accurately.

Gun laws

To the Editor:

Having just read your Dec. 10 editorial on "Guns Still Killing," I got a little mad. I wondered if you or your paper were aware of some of the following facts. First, all guns are registered with the federal government and have been for almost 12 years. (1968 Federal Gun Control Act.)

However, when it comes to handguns, they are registered with both the state and federal governments. The state of California has a 15-day mandatory waiting period on the purchase of a handgun, from the time of purchase to the time a person can pick up the gun.

DURING THIS time each person is run through the C.I.& I. (Criminal Identification and Investigation) computers in Sacramento to make it legal for him or her to purchase a handgun. The buyer must be able to pass both state and federal questions before being able to purchase and pick up (after 15 days) a handgun.

Also, any person who buys two or more handguns in a seven-day period has his or her name sent to the local federal A.T.F. (Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms) office. When any person purchases a handgun a copy of the state form is sent to that person's chief of police in the city or town they live in. At the present time, the state of California has on its books a law that makes it a five-year jail sentence if a handgun is used in the committing of a crime. This law or jail sentence is one of the first things thrown out by our liberal judges when a criminal who has used a handgun in a crime comes up before them. It's called plea bargaining.

Please, we have more than enough laws on the books at the present time; let's just enforce them. I feel just as bad as the next person when there are needless murders and killings, but I don't think more legislation is the answer. I feel we have a problem in the courts and the criminal justice system. Let's work on them.

Dial-A-Ride

To the Editor:

For years Laguna Beach city councils have promised to help senior citizens who live on fixed incomes and need all kinds of help, especially housing.

They also promised to help on such issues as Dial-A-Ride, but the campaign pledges of candidates were completely forgotten once they became council members.

Bear in mind that Dial-A-Ride costs are about $15,000 per year. With about 5,000 senior citizens (about 25 percent of the Laguna Beach area population) the cost would be about $3 per person per year, or about 25 cents a month — or about the price of half a cup of coffee in a Laguna Beach restaurant. And the program probably would become self-supporting once it is functioning.

Et cetera

To the Editor:

Here's another example of a frequently mispronounced expression. I refer to the much maligned "etc." The unenlightened insist on saying "EK CETERA." Maybe this is a byproduct of the widespread elimination of the study of Latin in our educational establishment.

Any first-year student of Latin will know that the letters "etc" stand for the words ET CETERA. ET is Latin for AND and CETERA translates literally OTHERS. It is simply AND OTHERS.

The satisfaction derived from using the correct pronunciation was demonstrated some years ago by a popular talk show host on KYW Philadelphia. The day after I wrote him a note on the subject he had occasion to use the expression and he fairly shouted ET CETERA! with a feeling of elation. What's more he repeated the words twice more!

Try it sometime. Simply say ET CETERA! It's a great feeling!

Toxic liquid spilled

SAN DIEGO (AP) Thirteen paramedics were treated for exposure to insecticide after a tanker truck overturned on a hill, killing one man and covering a road for 100 yards with the highly toxic liquid.

Three farm workers on the truck were injured in the accident Wednesday. Pablo Alvarado, 19, of Oaxaca, Mexico, died of accident injuries, not exposure to the insecticide.

The paramedics were exposed to guthion 2S, an organic phosphate poison registered for use on tomato crops.

Early quiz granted in Robbins case

SACRAMENTO (AP) State Sen. Alan Robbins' prosecutor has won permission to take pretrial testimony from a girlfriend of a woman who says Robbins seduced her when she was 16.

Robbins, 37, a Van Nuys Democrat, is charged with illegal sexual conduct with three teen-age girls and possession of a small amount of marijuana. He has pleaded innocent.

On Wednesday, Superior Court Judge Benjamin Diaz granted Deputy District Attorney Albert Locher permission to take videotaped testimony from Kathy Noyes, a friend of alleged victim Lori Terwilliger.

Locher said Ms. Noyes is scheduled to leave Saturday for six months in Australia and will not be available at Robbins' trial, to start Jan. 26.

He said the testimony will be presented to jurors if Robbins is ordered to stand trial. A preliminary hearing is scheduled for Dec. 29 to determine if a trial is needed.

Ms. Noyes did not testify before the grand jury that indicted Robbins on Oct. 31, but her name was mentioned by several witnesses.

Ms. Terwilliger and one of her friends, Susan Hague, told jurors that early in 1979 Ms. Noyes accompanied them to Robbins' Sacramento apartment, where they smoked marijuana.

Ms. Terwilliger, now 18, said Robbins had given her a key, but was not present when they visited.

Radioactive waste dumping admitted

SANTA BARBARA (AP) The federal Environmental Protection Agency has admitted that low-level radioactive waste was dumped in three deep-sea locations south of Santa Cruz Island in the 1950s and early 1960s.

Agency officials said they do not know much about the nature of the waste or the precise location of the dumps, but are investigating whether they posed health or environmental hazards.

Navigational maps published by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration indicate a "chemical munition dumping area" in the general area indicated by the EPA.

THE THREE sites indicated by the EPA range in depth from 3,600 feet to 6,000 feet and extend from six to more than 30 miles south of Santa Cruz Island.

The waste was packed in 55-gallon drums weighted with cement.

William R. Curtis, of the EPA's office of Radiation Programs, said "both the packaging and procedures previously used and the disposal of radioactive wastes at sites considered acceptable in the past would be considered substandard today."

The EPA information came in a letter to Fred Eissler of the Scenic Shoreline Preservation Conference of Santa Barbara, a citizens' group. Eissler had asked about possible nuclear waste dump sites in or near the Santa Barbara Channel.

In his reply, Curtis said EPA and NOAA are preparing a program to monitor the old offshore waste disposal sites that will include "intensive assessment efforts of past disposal practices at all sites."

CURTIS CITED an EPA report that said since most of the waste "was regarded primarily as garbage, precise records were apparently not kept of the specific locations."

The now-defunct Atomic Energy Commission was in charge of civilian and military nuclear waste disposal during the period when the dumps were used.

Dry regions may get rain

By The Associated Press

A 20 percent chance of showers offers hope of breaking Northern California's long dry spell today or Friday, but the National Weather Service says the soupy haze plaguing the central and coastal valleys will linger on.

Scattered showers over the Sierra Nevada are expected to dump snow above the 9,000 foot level.

Little change of temperature is expected in most areas.

Flu epidemic looming

New LA area outbreak could get worse

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A mild influenza epidemic which has left a lot of empty desks at school and work and may have caused some deaths could grow worse in the next few weeks, health officials said.

Evidence that the influenza strain dubbed A-Bangkok-1979, so named because it was first detected in that Thailand city in late 1979, surfaced in late October when doctors at the Claremont Colleges noticed students arriving for treatment of flu-like symptoms.

"We've isolated the virus all over the county from a college-age group in the San Gabriel Valley to nursing homes in the San Fernando and Gardena-Inglewood areas as well as in central Los Angeles," said Dr. Shirley Fannin, chief of acute communicable disease control at the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services.

Fannin said A-Bangkok-1979 strain is characterized by such symptoms as high fever, headaches or body aches, some sore throats and coughs. It is "rather severe" for three to five days.

"People with it are generally not able to get up and get out of bed," she said. "Very often, we see a two-week recovery period. You're not terribly ill but you feel weak. People with it get depressed and wonder if they will ever get well again. Most people will get as sick as the devil but they will recover."

The influenza strain, however, is not as acute as the Hong Kong virus that attacked Southern California residents in 1963 or the Asian flu of 1957, which by Nov. 20 of that year had killed 892 people in the United States.

Fannin said the current epidemic should peak by late January or early February and said the fact that schools will close next week for the holidays should help limit the spread of the disease.

Pet deer doomed? Many ask mercy

SACRAMENTO (AP) — A 110 pound buck deer, once a pet, is to be put to sleep next week because state officials say it is dangerous.

The Sacramento Bee said today that pleas to save the deer were pouring into county and state offices. It said some of the callers were rangeland owners who volunteered to give the deer a home.

The deer is now in a state laboratory at Sacramento State University where it was used in a veterinarian test.

STATE DEPARTMENT of Fish and Game veterinarian David Jessup and laboratory director Howard Leach both said Wednesday that all alternatives to death had been considered. "But we haven't changed our minds," said Jessup.

The deer had been taken from Grand Island, in the Sacramento River, on Nov. 23 after reportedly butting a neighbor. It had been brought from the Sierra by a family of migrant workers, who were keeping it as a pet.

Jessup said the animal, despite his temporary lack of antlers, was determined to be capable of killing humans.

He added, "We have pictures of people being disemboweled and gored by bucks that were raised in captivity by humans. Wild deer run when they see man. But this buck has lost his fear of humans."

THE SACRAMENTO RIVER Delta warden who took in the deer, Jim Dixon, said, "If you'd seen me and several other people get butted by this deer, you'd understand. Our concern is the school children nearby waiting for a bus. When these deer lose their fear of humans, there isn't a human being who can defend himself against their strength."

Officials at Folsom Zoo considered taking the deer, but changed their minds. Zookeeper Gordon Brong said injuries from domesticated deer are more frequent than from other kinds of animals.

Before putting it to death, the DFG decided to use the deer to test a new livestock virus. The virus did not make the deer sick.

Coast planners' advice premature

University Drive is a roadway with two ends and no middle. One end deadends on the Irvine side of Upper Newport Bay. The other deadends on the opposite side of the bay.

For years, University has been envisioned as a needed link between Irvine and Costa Mesa, cutting across the top of the bay, and as such it has been shown on city and county master plans.

Now state Coastal Commission planners have recommended — in a somewhat sweeping gesture — that the long-planned but much-delayed road should not be completed.

Further, the state planners say the thoroughfare should be left off circulation maps in the proposed Newport Beach Local Coastal Plan.

Three years ago, Newport council members fought over whether an environmental study of the proposed connection should be undertaken.

The council opted to skip that study, yielding to environmentalists who argued the road would disrupt wildlife and plant life in the bay area.

The coastal commission, in its directive to the city of Newport Beach, contends the same thing.

But without the environmental study that went down the tubes three years ago, it has never been established that completion of University Drive would hurt either birds or plants.

This has been the problem with the University plan all along — city and county agencies have never been allowed to get even to first base.

Too bad the coastal commission can't hold off on its rapid-fire suggestions until the facts are known.

Playing both sides?

Among the chief concerns officials in Newport Beach have singled out in their criticisms of the master plan for John Wayne Airport is traffic.

In a lengthy review of the plan, city officials complain that it calls for major airport improvements and projects increased annual passenger loads without coming to grips with traffic impact.

While their point certainly may be valid, some may wonder whether Newport is to be taken seriously.

It wasn't long ago that the Newport City Council approved plans for a 440-room hotel near the airport. Opponents argued long and loud that the hotel would only compound poor traffic conditions in the area.

Although the firm building the hotel is required to make street improvements prior to opening, it is doubtful the hotel will have a totally positive impact on traffic conditions.

Similarly, although road improvements will be required to help mitigate increased use of the county airport, it is clear that more passengers means more cars and worse traffic conditions.

While we remain in support of Newport's efforts to contain growth of the airport, we're inclined to agree that Newport seems to be playing both sides of the traffic argument. And some may find that tough to buy.

Sports feel pinch

District trustees are to decide Jan. 13 whether to help pay for team transportation to interscholastic contests.

Last school year, the district spent about $100,000 on athletic transportation. This year's budget is $50,000. The various athletic teams and their supporters are attempting to finance the difference.

Fund raising hasn't been that successful.

Superintendent John Nicoll has recommended the district pay the $22,250 deficit this year.

But he has charged the board of trustees with deciding once and for all whether or not to continue interscholastic athletics in view of district budget problems.

It's a tough question. Sports are an important and traditional aspect of high school and it's difficult to take away from today's students something enjoyed by the thousands of us who went before them.

But when the choice is between cutting educational programs or cutting out subsidies to sports programs, the answer is clear.

Boyd/Musical trick

By L.M. BOYD

Musicians learn early that they can quiet down a noisy audience simply by playing softly. You don't get that kind of racket in the concert halls, not usually. But it happens often in the Las Vegas-type clubs. And the performers need all their tricks to put in a good night's work. The harmonica whiz Larry Adler specializes in it. He manages his audience by the way he plays the instrument.

Miami now is second only to Havana worldwide in the size of its Cuban population.

Q. How come a person's nose, as I've read, is more sensitive in the late morning and late afternoon than at other times of day?

A. Probably it's hooked up with hunger. Before lunch and dinner, your nose is primed to find the whereabouts of same. It's not all that simple, clearly, and no doubt dates all the way back to the scavenger centuries, the times of the hunters and hunted. Or that's what the experts say.

Sport show sales show that lady joggers like a white-with-blue-trim running shoe while men joggers prefer a blue-with-white-trim shoe.

Q. What's the international distress signal, if any, for an airplane downed in the wilderness?

A. Three fires about 50 feet apart in a triangle.

Civil defense efforts founder

WASHINGTON — Ronald Reagan's vice president-elect, George Bush, asserted during the primary campaign that a nuclear war was in fact winnable. But the government agency most directly responsible for safeguarding the American populace from a nuclear holocaust emphatically disagrees.

The underfunded, overlooked Federal Emergency Management Agency is charged with protection of the American people in the event that Soviet nuclear bombs start raining down on the continental United States. But a confidential FEMA report — prepared under contract by the National Governors' Association — makes clear that our preparations for civil defense can be summed up in one word: deplorable.

Indeed, Defense Department assessments cited in the FEMA report estimate that, in our present state of civil defense disarray, "some 160 million people would be killed by an attack." The Pentagon didn't even try to guess what additional injuries would be sustained by those who survived an enemy nuclear strike.

MEANWHILE, of course, our intelligence agencies report that the Soviet Union has intensified its efforts in recent years to improve its civil defense program. And as FEMA has learned in its unsuccessful efforts to get support for its programs, critics insist that an adequate civil defense setup can lead the military to think the unthinkable — that nuclear war is a reasonable option.

"There is a general overestimation by the American public about national civil defense planning and funding," the FEMA report states, adding: "National policy has been equivocal, and guidance from the federal level has been negligible."

In particular, the document discloses an appalling lack of cooperation between Washington and the 50 state governments, which are ultimately responsible for the safety of the public in a nuclear attack.

"Governors and citizens trust that the federal government is planning for the major programs dealing with an attack," the secret report notes, adding bluntly: "That is a delusion."

Here are some of the basic problems perceived by the civil defense agency:

— POPULATION relocation. The primary method envisioned so far by our planners to save lives in case of enemy attack is the movement of huge numbers of people from target areas — what FEMA calls "Crisis Relocation Planning." The trouble is that many of the state officials who would have to carry out this logistical nightmare have concluded simply that it won't work.

Communications. "Governors in general do not know how they will be notified if an attack is imminent," the report states. "Will there be individual telephone calls from the president? From the Department of Defense? From FEMA?" Many governors don't even have the security clearance that would entitle them to the latest intelligence estimates. They might like ordinary citizens — have to depend on the media for their information.

— "CONTINUITY of leadership." Preparation of self-sufficient emergency centers for local and national leaders is viewed as a necessity by the civil defense planners. There are thousands of these "emergency operating centers" now in existence, dating back to the days following the Cuban missile crisis in 1962. These centers should be blast-resistant and equipped with reliable communications systems. But the FEMA report found that most of these centers are in pitiful condition, and would be useless in the event of nuclear attack.

GATHERING NUTS: Throughout its history, the Federal Bureau of Investigation has had to keep tabs on an incredible number of cuckoos, and until his death in 1972 Director J. Edgar Hoover wanted to be kept informed on all of them.

One far-out organization that drew the FBI's — and Hoover's — attention was the "Silver Shirts of America," a Nazi-like group founded by one William Pelley in Asheville, N.C. Anti-Semitic and anti-communist, it flourished in the 1930s and numbered thousands of adherents. Pelley made a comfortable living writing publications and selling uniforms.

According to a "personal and confidential" letter to Hoover from the Charlotte, N.C., FBI office in the early 1930s, an unidentified Oregonian had received a visionary "ray of light" some years previously, predicting that "first, a great national figure would (die) in a seeming air accident; second, a powerful figure in politics would be assassinated; third, a man would come forth and boldly enter the lists on a platform of Christ and the Constitution."

The first predictions conceivably came true: Humorist Will Rogers died in a plane crash in August 1935, and Sen. Huey Long was assassinated a month later.

Pelley, of course, viewed himself as the third man in the prediction. He died in the 1960s, still under J. Edgar Hoover's watchful eye.

Who is responsible for all the killing?

To the Editor:

The controversy goes on — who is responsible for the deaths of: King, Kennedy and now Lennon? You must also include all the small children who on their way home from school, get murdered for no obvious reason.

There is no "obvious" or public mourning for Lisa Rosales. Only her family are lighting candles, and they are not marching down the Sunset Strip or playing Beatles' records. They are just heartbroken that someone would destroy a beautiful 7-year-old, a beautiful Black leader, a wonderful President.

Where does this all end? Who will take the responsibility for all this decadence? Will taking away guns from the public do it? (Doubtful).

Legislation is only effective with law-abiding citizens; what about the other faction? They get seven years at our expense and are released to repeat their previous errors.

So who is responsible for all this? I guess we are — would you believe?

Applause

To the Editor:

Re The Associated Press article titled "Man's for Animals," dated Sunday, Dec. 14, I would like to give a good round of applause for Michael Fox.

His enlightened attitude on the treatment of animals in this country, especially those used for human consumption, i.e. veal calves, chickens and swine, is one with which I can highly identify.

He is neither a vegetarian nor an antivivisectionist, but a humane, compassionate veterinarian.

Long may his banner wave!

Misinformation

To the Editor:

With the death last week of John Lennon, who led, perhaps, the most public life of any man of the last 20 years, we were indeed shocked by the number of factual errors made by the news media regarding his life and career. For example:

— Several writers have cited the lyrics "the dream is over" (from Lennon's 1970 album "Plastic Ono Band") to sum up his death, incorrectly referring to it as a song title. The song in which those lyrics appeared was titled "God."

Cleave Herman, of KFWB radio, identified Paul McCartney as the Beatles' lead guitarist and George Harrison as their bassist. The reverse is true.

CBS News identified George Martin as the manager of the Beatles. He was their producer.

Obviously, John Lennon should not be made out to be more than he actually was. (The rock press will undoubtedly be calling him a god.) However, he was in fact a great musician, composer, and tireless worker for peace and social justice. He cared about us. We only wish that the people reporting his death would have cared enough about him to chronicle his life accurately.

Gun laws

To the Editor:

Having just read your Dec. 10 editorial on "Guns Still Killing," I got a little mad. I wondered if you or your paper were aware of some of the following facts. First, all guns are registered with the federal government and have been for almost 12 years. (1968 Federal Gun Control Act.)

However, when it comes to handguns, they are registered with both the state and federal governments. The state of California has a 15-day mandatory waiting period on the purchase of a handgun, from the time of purchase to the time a person can pick up the gun.

DURING THIS time each person is run through the C.I.& I. (Criminal Identification and Investigation) computers in Sacramento to make it legal for him or her to purchase a handgun. The buyer must be able to pass both state and federal questions before being able to purchase and pick up (after 15 days) a handgun.

Also, any person who buys two or more handguns in a seven-day period has his or her name sent to the local federal A.T.F. (Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms) office. When any person purchases a handgun a copy of the state form is sent to that person's chief of police in the city or town they live in. At the present time, the state of California has on its books a law that makes it a five-year jail sentence if a handgun is used in the committing of a crime. This law or jail sentence is one of the first things thrown out by our liberal judges when a criminal who has used a handgun in a crime comes up before them. It's called plea bargaining.

Please, we have more than enough laws on the books at the present time; let's just enforce them. I feel just as bad as the next person when there are needless murders and killings, but I don't think more legislation is the answer. I feel we have a problem in the courts and the criminal justice system. Let's work on them.

Dial-A-Ride

To the Editor:

For years Laguna Beach city councils have promised to help senior citizens who live on fixed incomes and need all kinds of help, especially housing.

They also promised to help on such issues as Dial-A-Ride, but the campaign pledges of candidates were completely forgotten once they became council members.

Bear in mind that Dial-A-Ride costs are about $15,000 per year. With about 5,000 senior citizens (about 25 percent of the Laguna Beach area population) the cost would be about $3 per person per year, or about 25 cents a month — or about the price of half a cup of coffee in a Laguna Beach restaurant. And the program probably would become self-supporting once it is functioning.

Reason needed

To the Editor:

The possibility of school closures always arouses parents, but the subject need not be as emotional as the Daily Pilot portrayed it (Dec. 10).

The number one consideration is the education of each student. How can we offer the best program to our children within the constraints which face the district? The decision will be made in the near future.

Since Sept. 22, parents in the Corona del Mar zone have been meeting with school administrators and several members of the Board of Education to discuss various ways of maintaining quality education in an era of declining enrollment.

We call on you as a responsible newspaper to give coverage equally to the many thoughtful discussions that are going on, and to avoid sensationalizing emotional ultimatums, so that the community can come to a reasonable decision.

Industry heads for robot era

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A robot that can tell the difference between a 2-inch screw and a 3-inch bolt and decide what to do with them makes a better worker than a robot that balks when anything but the bolt comes down the assembly line.

Development of such a "smart robot" is the aim of 30 scientists and engineers at Carnegie-Mellon University's new Robotics Institute, who hope their research will create the footsoldiers of the robotics revolution now sweeping industry.

"In a nutshell, we are trying to put artificial intelligence in robots," said Dr. Angel Jordan, dean of CMU's Carnegie Institute of Technology.

"CURRENT ROBOTS ARE nothing more than mechanisms that are programmed to do certain tasks in repetition. We want to add an element of artificial intelligence so they can make decisions or cope with changes," Jordan said in a recent interview.

A major project already under way is the development of robot systems for a "factory of the future" that have both human and robot workers.

But your future neighbor in this future factory won't look like the stumpy R2-D2 of "Star Wars." Industrial robots in CMU's labs instead are mechanical arms of varying degrees of flexibility, linked to computer "brains." Jordan said the new robots will have a sense of touch and what amounts to three-dimensional vision.

THE ROBOTICS INSTITUTE officially will open Dec. 9 with a seminar and a half-dozen robot demonstrations, said the institute director, Dr. Raj Reddy.

CMU President Richard Cyert said one big goal of the new institute is to develop robot systems equal to or better than those of the Japanese, who are the current world leaders.

The Japanese claim a total 30,000 robots in their factories. At the Zama factory of Nissan Motor Co., one of the most automated in the world, 96.4 percent of the body parts of Datsun cars are welded by robots performing in military-like precision.

INTRODUCTION OF ROBOTS into U.S. factories has been slow, despite initial claims of increased productivity, reduced errors and lower labor costs. About 4,500 robots are in use in the nation today, according to an official at Unimation Inc., a robot manufacturer.

The need to boost productivity in American factories is a big factor behind the push toward smarter robots.

"As a country we must increase productivity," said Cyert. "The robots look like a major factor in developing such increases."

HB toxic dump site OK'd for condos

The Huntington Beach Planning Commission has approved the excavation of an abandoned dump containing toxic chemicals to make way for a proposed condominium development.

The unanimous decision was made over the objections of the South Coast Air Quality Management District but with the endorsement of county and state health officials.

The air quality district opposes excavation because it contends toxic and possibly cancer-causing fumes could be spread by winds throughout the community.

District spokesman Nathan L. Zlasney recommended to city planners Tuesday that the four-acre site, located 700 feet southeast of the Bolsa Chica Street and Warner Avenue intersection, should be encapsulated with underground concrete walls and a concrete covering.

But County Health Department official Robert Stone told commissioners that excavation is desirable to prevent long-term hazards such as underground water contamination from leaching chemicals, or an underground buildup of explosive methane gas.

Frank Mola, head of the development firm said he did not know there were toxic chemicals buried at the site when he purchased it two and a half years ago.

He proposes to build 224 condominiums on 12.5 acres that includes the abandoned dump site, the so-called Boucher Landfill. In the 1960s the dump was operated by the county as a landfill.

If the decision of the planning commission is not appealed within 10 days, Mola said he plans to begin excavation by the middle of January.

Miller Chambers of the State Health Department told the planning commissioners that his department will have a field truck on sight to monitor gas emissions, underground water and soil quality during excavation.

The planning commission also required the developer of the proposed condominiums, Mola Development Corp., to fence the area and to also provide a plan to monitor the air, underground water and soil quality during excavation.

According to the 243-page environmental impact report, developed by the firm of Jack K. Bryant and Associates of Long Beach, an emergency evacuation plan will be dispersed to the homes, condominiums and apartments within 2,400 feet of the dump site.

Evacuation would be necessary if high concentrations of toxic fumes were released into the air during excavation.

Board's recall pushed

Petitions are now being circulated by a local citizens group that is trying to recall four members of the Dana Point Sanitary District board.

Board members are facing recall because of their refusal to rescind a controversial pension plan they adopted last April that would pay members $500 a month after they retire.

The $500 monthly check represents 10 times what board members receive for attending 12 meetings each year to conduct district business.

UNDER THE PLAN, members receive the pension payment after they reach age 65 and have served for eight years on the board and have maintained an attendance record for board meetings.

Members would also receive an additional $10 a month for each year served over the eight years required to qualify for the pension.

Despite the recall move against them, the board members have refused to rescind the pension plan, maintaining that their adoption of the plan was lawful.

"We don't cater to small pressure groups," said board member Angus Smith. "We cater to all the people. Now it's up to the recall people to carry out their threat."

THE FOUR BOARD members facing recall, Smith, John McComb, Jack Schmidt and Earl Salonen, were served with notices of recall in October.

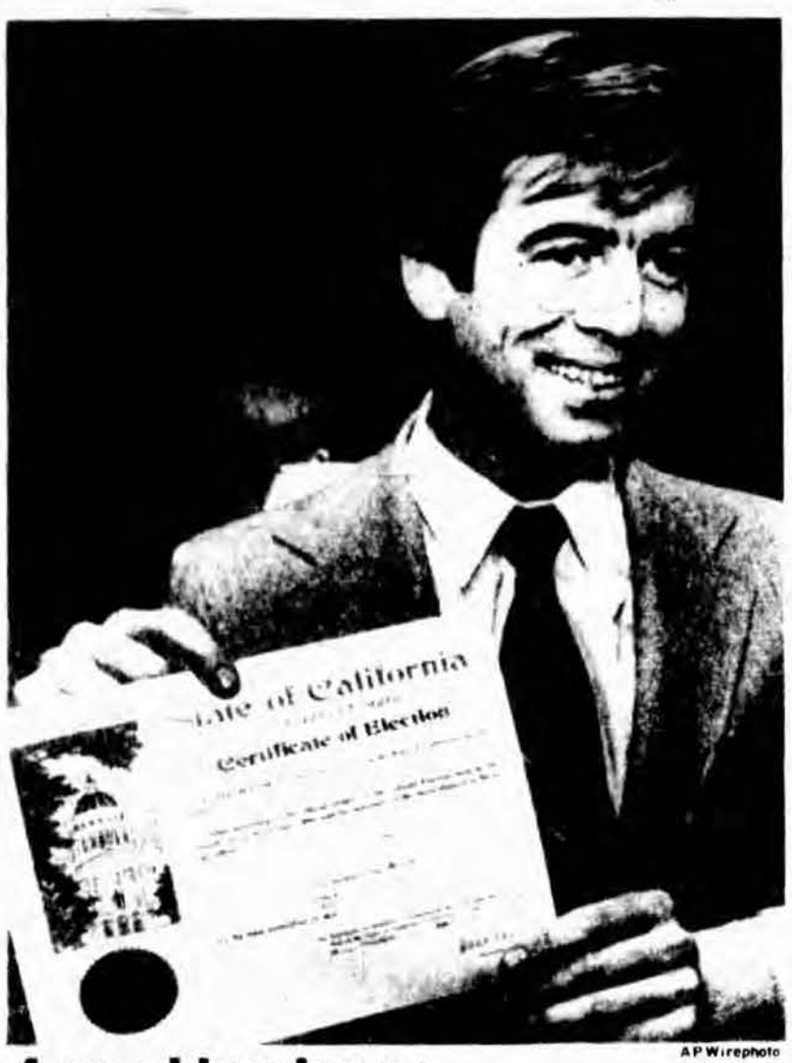

A fifth board member, Louis E. Dunning, also was a recall target, but he died less than a month after being served.

The group initiating the recall campaign is the Dana Point Citizens for Action.

Group spokesmen say the recall wasn't launched over a legal question, but, rather, on the question of whether board members deserve a $500 per month pension considering the time and energy put in on sanitation district business.

AFTER BEING served with notices of recall in April, the sanitation board members returned written answers to the Orange County Registrar of Voters to be included on the recall petition.

The Dana Point Citizens for Action have until March 5 to collect the signatures of 25 percent of the registered voters in the sanitary district to qualify the recall for the ballot.

Open house visitor sought as HB thief

On Sunday, Dec. 7, a tall, well-dressed man who said he was interested in buying a home visited three open house showings in north Huntington Beach.

During his visits, this "buyer" slipped into the master bedrooms undetected and pocketed cash and jewelry valued at $2,800, according to Huntington Beach police.

"The open house thefts have promoted local realtors to upgrade their security precautions at such showings.

IN THE MEANTIME, police are continuing their search for the open house thief.

Detective Gary Meza said the suspect is a black man, about 30 years-old, six feet, three inches tall, and 200 pounds. He said the man was described as "very good looking and very well-dressed."

The man drove a newer model burgundy-colored Mustang auto, possibly with out-of-state plates, police said.

Meza said the man represented himself as a prospective buyer at two of the Huntington Beach homes and left false identification as a real estate agent at the third house.

THE DETECTIVE said the suspect waited until the agent or homeowner conducting the open house was busy with other visitors. The suspect then pocketed cash and valuables that were easy to conceal.

A description of the man has been transmitted to nearby law enforcement agencies and to area realtors, in hopes of catching the suspect if he tries the scheme elsewhere, Meza said.

In the wake of these thefts, the Huntington Beach-Fountain Valley Board of Realtors has issued warnings at its board meetings and in its published bulletins.

CAROLYN EWING, vice president of the realtors association, said agents are being urged to teamsit at open house showings, to make it more difficult for visitors to slip away by themselves.

Also, Ms. Ewing said, agents are reminding their clients to remove all loose valuables and place them in a safe deposit box prior to an open house.

Agents themselves are being urged not to leave their own calculators or purses unattended.

Finally, agents who have suspicions about unfamiliar visitors claiming to be realtors themselves are urged to ask to see association membership cards.

Agents who still feel uncertain about the credentials of a visitor have been instructed to jot down the stranger's auto license number, Ms. Ewing said.

Both sides seek county aid on marsh

Orange County planning commissioners were presented with 3,700 petition signatures from two opposing groups battling over the future of the Bolsa Chica marsh.

Rhoda Martyn, a Huntington Beach resident and member of the Amigos de Bolsa Chica, presented the commissioners with 2,700 signatures favoring preservation of the marsh and protecting it from development.

LARRY COON of Costa Mesa gave the commission a petition from the California Marine Association with 1,000 signatures supporting a boat marina and navigable channel into the marsh.

The petitions were presented to the commission at its first of four scheduled public sessions on the state mandated Local Coastal Plan for the Bolsa Chica.

THE NEXT HEARING before the planning commission is scheduled Jan. 6 at 1:30 p.m. in the Santa Ana Civic Center.

The Local Coastal Plan sets development guidelines for the coastal zone. The Bolsa Chica plan is to be submitted to the Orange County Board of Supervisors, the Regional Coastal Commission and finally the state Coastal Commission for approval later this year.

Police plan display in HB

Law enforcement vehicles and public safety displays will be featured at a Huntington Beach Police Department exhibit at the Huntington Center shopping mall, 7777 Edinger Ave.

Officers will be stationed at the exhibit between 11 a.m. and 9 p.m., Thursday through Tuesday.

Literature on crime prevention and home security will be available, along with lock displays, emergency phone number stickers and information on the Neighborhood Watch program.

Waddill plans appeal

Will continue to seek $500,000 damages

Dr. William Waddill says he will appeal an Orange County Superior Court jury's refusal to award him $500,000 damages he had sought stemming from his purchase with two other men of the Huntington Harbour Beach Club in 1973.

Waddill said he was "very disappointed" that the jury in Judge Leonard Goldstein's courtroom had not found the attorney who represented the partnership to be part of a conspiracy to defraud him.

That attorney, Jerome Bame, was exonerated by the jury while a second defendant, Stan Krolak Industries, was not held liable for damages for allegedly over-appraising the value of the club to get refinancing.

"I'M SURE MR. Bame is elated and we're disappointed," Waddill said Wednesday.

Waddill, a Westminster obstetrician, twice unsuccessfully prosecuted for the death of a newborn child who survived a saline abortion, had contended in his legal action that he and another man now deceased were duped into buying the beach club by a promoter who was later convicted of embezzling from his fellow investors and overstating the value of the club to get new financing.

Waddill's attorney, Michael Richman, had argued that Bame was hired to arrange for the purchase of the beach club for $2 million and that he had allegedly misrepresented to Waddill that a third member of the partnership, Frank Jannette, had invested $260,000 more than he had.

WADDILL SAID HE believed the jury was confused and overwhelmed by jury instructions regarding negligent legal misrepresentation and fraudulent misrepresentation.

"They were confusing even to me," he said.

The physician, who claimed he lost $500,000 in the beach club venture, said his case was stymied because Judge Gold stein would not allow the introduction of certain key evidence.

Unlike medical malpractice, legal malpractice is difficult to prove, Waddill said, and he felt the jury did not follow the testimony of expert witnesses.

The civil case took three months to try and Waddill said he is happy to get back to his medical practice on a full-time basis as well as return to his legal studies.

HIGHLAND PARK, Mich. (AP) — Leaders of the United Auto Workers union say they're willing to re-negotiate their current contract with Chrysler, but they can't predict whether workers will agree to the troubled automaker's request for a 22-month wage freeze.

$5.4 million

Sycamore Hills purchase mulled

Laguna Beach City Council members have ordered city officials to work out details of a $5,440,000 offer for 60 acres of Sycamore Hills land.

The council extended the deadline for negotiations with the Baywood Development Co. of Newport Beach to Jan. 20 after expressing general satisfaction with the offer Tuesday.

Baywood's purchase would give the city enough money to pay off most of a nearly $7 million debt on the 522-acre Sycamore Hills property.

THE CITY WOULD still owe about $1.5 million on the land as of July 1, 1981, City Manager Ken Frank told council members.

Frank said there are several issues in the offer to be resolved, but added "we can probably reach agreement."

Frank and City Attorney Marc Winthrop will also negotiate a revised agreement with Rancho Palos Verdes, former owners of Sycamore Hills.

That agreement would incorporate the provisions of Baywood's offer.

THE OFFER includes an initial payment of $1,540,000 and subsequent payment of $3.9 million plus 10 percent interest over a four-year period.

The first payment would be due upon the close of escrow, which is to come no later than Oct. 1, 1981. That installment would pay off the total accrued interest on the city debt at that date.

Baywood plans to build 296 townhomes on the 60-acre parcel.

The 60-acre portion is located off El Toro Road adjacent to Leisure World.

CHP officer given state valor award

A California Highway Patrol sergeant stationed in Laguna Hills was awarded the Medal of Valor in ceremonies for plunging into a flood control channel last January and pulling a woman to safety.

Sgt. Thomas C. Draper was awarded the medal, the state's highest award for bravery, by CHP Commissioner Glen Craig. In the 50-year history of the CHP, only 30 Medals of Valor have been awarded to CHP officers.

DRAPER WAS CLOSING off a flooded portion of Camino Capistrano in Mission Viejo when he saw a car carrying two people being washed off the roadway by flood waters.

The vehicle was carried into the Oso Creek flood control channel just south of Avery Parkway where a man and a woman escaped from the car.

Draper reportedly hung by his feet from a trestle in an attempt to reach the two people as they were swept by in the fast moving flood waters, but was unable to grab them as they passed.

Draper then jumped in his patrol car and drove downstream. Meanwhile the man had washed up on the bank, but the woman was left clinging to a small patch of vegetation in the middle of the torrent.

Draper then plunged into the water, made his way to the middle of the channel, and returned with the woman to safety.

Quake rule OK'd

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The City Council has capped six years of debate over earthquake safety by giving preliminary approval to an ordinance requiring structural reinforcement of some 8,000 older buildings. Tuesday's action could cost property owners an estimated $750 million over the next 15 years.

ABC still the silliest

EDITOR'S NOTE: AP Television Writer Peter Boyer has to watch a lot of television, and sometimes it gets a little silly — the programming, that is. In this column, he imagines a Coalition on Television Silliness that takes stock of the phenomenon.

By PETER J. BOYER

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Coalition on Television Silliness, a little-known watchdog organization based in Eagle Rock, has named ABC the No. 1 network in TV silliness for 1980. NBC finished a close second, followed by CBS.

For the third consecutive year, ABC's "Laverne and Shirley" was named silliest series, with an average of eight minutes of unredeeming silliness per episode.

The coalition was founded five years ago by Dr. Noroan S. Neer, a local psychiatrist and consumer activist. In announcing this year's survey, Neer said:

"The documented dangers of televised silliness are shocking. From specific triggering of imitative behavior to broader effects on our nation's moral fiber, reasonable people can no longer ignore the harmful effects of massive amounts of televised silliness."

The "Silliest TV Genre" of 1980 was the celebrity competition show, ranging from "Battle of Network Stars" to "City vs. Country Showdown." Silliest of these, Neer says, was a recent NBC entry called "Battle of Beverly Hills."

"This program logged 94 minutes of pure silly," says Neer, "and it was only a 97-minute show."

Toxic liquid spilled

SAN DIEGO (AP) Thirteen paramedics were treated for exposure to insecticide after a tanker truck overturned on a hill, killing one man and covering a road for 100 yards with the highly toxic liquid

Three farm workers on the truck were injured in the accident Wednesday Pablo Alvarado, 19, of Oaxaca, Mexico, died of accident injuries, not exposure to the insecticide

The paramedics were exposed to guthion-2S, an organic phosphate poison registered for use on tomato crops.

Bomb claimed

LOS ANGELES (AP) A group calling itself the "Croatian Liberation Army" is claiming responsibility for leaving a dynamite bomb at the San Pedro home of a city transportation commissioner. The device was safely detonated by police.

Commissioner Joseph Zaninovich said he was leaving for work Wednesday morning when he was alerted to a plastic bag on the porch because his dog was barking. He found six sticks of dynamite and a timing device when he peeked inside.

Name change?

SANTA MONICA (AP) — A move is underway to rename the Santa Monica Municipal Airport the Ronald Reagan Airport.

Principal sponsor of the name change is aviation executive Kenneth Krueger.

Krueger said recently that although Reagan lives in Pacific Palisades, he has used the airport many times since his election and will probably continue to do so during his presidency.

Gunman shot

SANTA MONICA (AP) — A 30-year-old robber who entered the beachfront home of actor Patrick O'Neal was fatally wounded with his own gun, police report.

Isaac Williams Jr., 30, of Lynwood, died Wednesday from an abdominal wound shortly after the shooting, said Detective Charles Wilson.

During the scuffle, Williams' gun was seized by Peter Dupre, who fired at Williams, Wilson said.

Flights to end?

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Due to fierce competition among international and U.S. airlines to capture the Los Angeles market, Thai Airways International has decided to suspend its flights to Los Angeles beginning next April, an executive of the airline said today.

Thai Airway's vice president for traffic, Nikorn Maneelert, said the present load factor of the Bangkok-Los Angeles route is too low to enable the carrier to break even.

Early quiz granted in Robbins case

SACRAMENTO (AP) — State Sen. Alan Robbins' prosecutor has won permission to take pretrial testimony from a girlfriend of a woman who says Robbins seduced her when she was 16.

Robbins, 37, a Van Nuys Democrat, is charged with illegal sexual conduct with three teen-age girls and possession of a small amount of marijuana. He has pleaded innocent.

On Wednesday, Superior Court Judge Benjamin Diaz granted Deputy District Attorney Albert Locher permission to take videotaped testimony from Kathy Noyes, a friend of alleged victim Lori Terwilliger.

Locher said Ms. Noyes is scheduled to leave Saturday for six months in Australia and will not be available at Robbins' trial, to start Jan. 26.

He said the testimony will be presented to jurors if Robbins is ordered to stand trial. A preliminary hearing is scheduled for Dec. 29 to determine if a trial is needed.

Ms. Noyes did not testify before the grand jury that indicted Robbins on Oct. 31, but her name was mentioned by several witnesses.

Ms. Terwilliger and one of her friends, Susan Hague, told jurors that early in 1979 Ms. Noyes accompanied them to Robbins' Sacramento apartment, where they smoked marijuana.

Ms. Terwilliger, now 18, said Robbins had given her a key, but was not present when they visited.

Radioactive waste dumping admitted

SANTA BARBARA (AP) — The federal Environmental Protection Agency has admitted that low-level radioactive waste was dumped in three deep-sea locations south of Santa Cruz Island in the 1950s and early 1960s.

Agency officials said they do not know much about the nature of the waste or the precise location of the dumps, but are investigating whether they posed health or environmental hazards.

Navigational maps published by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration indicate a "chemical munition dumping area" in the general area indicated by the EPA.

THE THREE sites indicated by the EPA range in depth from 3,600 feet to 6,000 feet and extend from six to more than 30 miles south of Santa Cruz Island.

The waste was packed in 55-gallon drums weighted with cement.

William R. Curtis, of the EPA's office of Radiation Programs, said "both the packaging and procedures previously used and the disposal of radioactive wastes at sites considered acceptable in the past would be considered substandard today."

The EPA information came in a letter to Fred Eissler of the Scenic Shoreline Preservation Conference of Santa Barbara, a citizens' group. Eissler had asked about possible nuclear waste dump sites in or near the Santa Barbara Channel.

In his reply, Curtis said EPA and NOAA are preparing a program to monitor the old offshore waste disposal sites that will include "intensive assessment efforts of past disposal practices at all sites."

CURTIS CITED an EPA report that said since most of the waste "was regarded primarily as garbage, precise records were apparently not kept of the specific locations."

The now-defunct Atomic Energy Commission was in charge of civilian and military nuclear waste disposal during the period when the dumps were used.

Dry regions may get rain

By The Associated Press

A 20 percent chance of showers offers hope of breaking Northern California's long dry spell today or Friday, but the National Weather Service says the soupy haze plaguing the central and coastal valleys will linger on.

Scattered showers over the Sierra Nevada are expected to dump snow above the 9,000 foot level.

Little change of temperature is expected in most areas.

Capable of killing

Pet deer doomed? Many ask mercy

SACRAMENTO (AP) — A 110-pound buck deer, once a pet, is to be put to sleep next week because state officials say it is dangerous.

The Sacramento Bee said today that pleas to save the deer were pouring into county and state offices. It said some of the callers were rangeland owners who volunteered to give the deer a home.

The deer is now in a state laboratory at Sacramento State University where it was used in a veterinarian test.

STATE DEPARTMENT of Fish and Game veterinarian David Jessup and laboratory director Howard Leach both said Wednesday that all alternatives to death had been considered. "But we haven't changed our minds," said Jessup.

The deer had been taken from Grand Island, in the Sacramento River, on Nov. 23 after reportedly butting a neighbor. It had been brought from the Sierra by a family of migrant workers, who were keeping it as a pet.

Jessup said the animal, despite his temporary lack of antlers, was determined to be capable of killing humans.

He added, "We have pictures of people being disemboweled and gored by bucks that were raised in captivity by humans. Wild deer run when they see man. But this buck has lost his fear of humans."

THE SACRAMENTO RIVER Delta warden who took in the deer, Jim Dixon, said, "If you'd seen me and several other people get butted by this deer, you'd understand. Our concern is the school children nearby waiting for a bus. When these deer lose their fear of humans, there isn't a human being who can defend himself against their strength."

Officials at Folsom Zoo considered taking the deer, but changed their minds. Zookeeper Gordon Brong said injuries from domesticated deer are more frequent than from other kinds of animals.

Before putting it to death, the DFG decided to use the deer to test a new livestock virus. The virus did not make the deer sick.

Flu epidemic looming

New LA area outbreak could get worse

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A mild influenza epidemic which has left a lot of empty desks at school and work and may have caused some deaths could grow worse in the next few weeks, health officials said.

Evidence that the influenza strain dubbed A-Bangkok-1979, so named because it was first detected in that Thailand city in late 1979, surfaced in late October when doctors at the Claremont Colleges noticed students arriving for treatment of flu-like symptoms.

"We've isolated the virus all over the county from a college-age group in the San Gabriel Valley to nursing homes in the San Fernando and Gardena-Inglewood areas as well as in central Los Angeles," said Dr. Shirley Fannin, chief of acute communicable disease control at the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services.

Fannin said A-Bangkok-1979 strain is characterized by such symptoms as high fever, headaches or body aches, some sore throats and coughs. It is "rather severe" for three to five days.

"People with it are generally not able to get up and get out of bed," she said. "Very often, we see a two-week recovery period. You're not terribly ill but you feel weak. People with it get depressed and wonder if they will ever get well again. Most people will get as sick as the devil but they will recover."

The influenza strain, however, is not as acute as the Hong Kong virus that attacked Southern California residents in 1963 or the Asian flu of 1957, which by Nov. 20 of that year had killed 892 people in the United States.

Fannin said the current epidemic should peak by late January or early February and said the fact that schools will close next week for the holidays should help limit the spread of the disease.

Traffic concerns raise questions

Costa Mesa planning commissioners turned down a couple of high-rise building projects south of San Diego Freeway on Bristol Street this year, partly because of traffic problems expected in the north part of the city.

But last week the commission approved a 15-story building to house a Broadway department store and 12 floors of offices at busy South Coast Plaza just to the north.

Much of the parking for the new structure, planners conceded, must be across Bristol in the Town Center, another Segerstrom family project already avoided by motorists because of the parking fees charged there.

Planners estimate Segerstrom's new Broadway project will generate 7,550 auto trips daily in the Bristol Street area.

Those trips will be added to traffic already glutting Bristol as north and southbound motorists avoid the stop-and-go snarl on the Costa Mesa Freeway.

The City Council, which is set to review the Broadway addition at a Jan. 12 study session, will hold one public hearing on the matter Jan. 19.

The council has ordered the Segerstrom development team to scale down some of its north Mesa projects in the past, but never has a proposal been denied.

Maybe this one will sail through on the same schedule. But we would hope the council fully grasps what the rest of us already know — that traffic is unbearable in this area now.

Can the city remain functional if this much more is added?

Sports feel pinch

High school sports are feeling the money squeeze as Newport-Mesa School District attempts to operate with ever-lowering levels of income.

District trustees are to decide Jan. 13 whether to help pay for team transportation to interscholastic contests.

Last school year, the district spent about $100,000 on athletic transportation. This year's budget is $50,000. The various athletic teams and their supporters are attempting to finance the difference.

Fund raising hasn't been that successful.

Only about $22,250 has been raised by the teams, and there is little money left for transporting students in such spring sports as golf, track, baseball, swimming, girls' softball, gymnastics and boys' tennis.

Superintendent John Nicoll has recommended the district pay the $22,250 deficit this year.

But he has charged the board of trustees with deciding once and for all whether or not to continue interscholastic athletics in view of district budget problems.

It's a tough question. Sports are an important and traditional aspect of high school and it's difficult to take away from today's students something enjoyed by the thousands of us who went before them.

But when the choice is between cutting educational programs or cutting out subsidies to sports programs, the answer is clear.

Advice premature

University Drive is a roadway with two ends and no middle. One end deadends on the Irvine side of Upper Newport Bay. The other deadends on the opposite side of the bay.

For years, University has been envisioned as a needed link between Irvine and Costa Mesa, cutting across the top of the bay, and as such it has been shown on city and county master plans.

Now state Coastal Commission planners have recommended — in a somewhat sweeping gesture — that the long-planned but much-delayed road should not be completed.

Further, the state planners say the thoroughfare should be left off circulation maps in the proposed Newport Beach Local Coastal Plan.

Three years ago, Newport council members fought over whether an environmental study of the proposed connection should be undertaken.

The council opted to skip that study, yielding to environmentalists who argued the road would disrupt wildlife and plant life in the bay area.

The coastal commission, in its directive to the city of Newport Beach, contends the same thing.

But without the environmental study that went down the tubes three years ago, it has never been established that completion of University Drive would hurt either birds or plants.

This has been the problem with the University plan all along — city and county agencies have never been allowed to get even to first base.

Too bad the coastal commission can't hold off on its rapid-fire suggestions until the facts are known.

Boyd/Musical trick

By L.M. BOYD

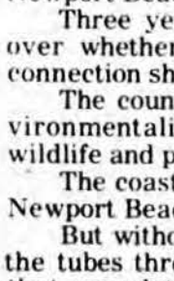

Musicians learn early that they can quiet down a noisy audience simply by playing softly. You don't get that kind of racket in the concert halls, not usually. But it happens often in the Las Vegas-type clubs. And the performers need all their tricks to put in a good night's work. The harmonica whiz Larry Adler specializes in it. He manages his audience by the way he plays the instrument.

Not every man who's losing his hair cares to be referred to as Old Baldy. There are one or two presumably, who'd rather be known by the scientific term as an oligotrichiac.

Sport show sales show that lady joggers like a white-with-blue-trim running shoe while men joggers prefer a blue-with-white-trim shoe.

Q. What's the international distress signal, if any, for an airplane downed in the wilderness?

A. Three fires about 50 feet apart in a triangle.

Civil defense efforts founder

WASHINGTON — Ronald Reagan's vice president-elect, George Bush, asserted during the primary campaign that a nuclear war was in fact winnable. But the government agency most directly responsible for safeguarding the American populace from a nuclear holocaust emphatically disagrees.

The underfunded, overlooked Federal Emergency Management Agency is charged with protection of the American people in the event that Soviet nuclear bombs start raining down on the continental United States. But a confidential FEMA report — prepared under contract by the National Governors' Association — makes clear that our preparations for civil defense can be summed up in one word: deplorable.

Indeed, Defense Department assessments cited in the FEMA report estimate that, in our present state of civil defense disarray, "some 160 million people would be killed by an attack." The Pentagon didn't even try to guess what additional injuries would be sustained by those who survived an enemy nuclear strike.

MEANWHILE, of course, our intelligence agencies report that the Soviet Union has intensified its efforts in recent years to improve its civil defense program. And as FEMA has learned in its unsuccessful efforts to get support for its programs, critics insist that an adequate civil defense setup can lead the military to think the unthinkable — that nuclear war is a reasonable option.

"There is a general overestimation by the American public about national civil defense planning and funding," the FEMA report states, adding: "National policy has been equivocal, and guidance from the federal level has been negligible."

In particular, the document discloses an appalling lack of cooperation between Washington and the 50 state governments, which are ultimately responsible for the safety of the public in a nuclear attack.

"Governors and citizens trust that the federal government is planning for the major programs dealing with an attack," the secret report notes, adding bluntly: "That is a delusion."

Here are some of the basic problems perceived by the civil defense agency:

— POPULATION relocation. The primary method envisioned so far by our planners to save lives in case of enemy attack is the movement of huge numbers of people from target areas — what FEMA calls "Crisis Relocation Planning." The trouble is that many of the state officials who would have to carry out this logistical nightmare have concluded simply that it won't work.

— Communications. "Governors in general do not know how they will be notified if an attack is imminent," the report states. "Will there be individual telephone calls from the president? From the Department of Defense? From FEMA?" Many governors don't even have the security clearance that would entitle them to the latest intelligence estimates. They might — like ordinary citizens — have to depend on the media for their information.

— "CONTINUITY of leadership." Preparation of self-sufficient emergency centers for local and national leaders is viewed as a necessity by the civil defense planners. There are thousands of these "emergency operating centers" now in existence, dating back to the days following the Cuban missile crisis in 1962. These centers should be blast-resistant and equipped with reliable communications systems. But the FEMA report found that most of these centers are in pitiful condition, and would be useless in the event of nuclear attack.

GATHERING NUTS: Throughout its history, the Federal Bureau of Investigation has had to keep tabs on an incredible number of cuckoos, and until his death in 1972 Director J. Edgar Hoover wanted to be kept informed on all of them.

One far-out organization that drew the FBI's — and Hoover's — attention was the "Silver Shirts of America," a Nazi-like group founded by one William Pelley in Asheville, N.C. Anti-Semitic and anti-communist, it flourished in the 1930s and numbered thousands of adherents. Pelley made a comfortable living writing publications and selling uniforms.

According to a "personal and confidential" letter to Hoover from the Charlotte, N.C., FBI office in the early 1930s, an unidentified Oregonian had received a visionary "ray of light" some years previously, predicting that "first, a great national figure would (die) in a seeming air accident; second, a powerful figure in politics would be assassinated; third, a man would come forth and boldly enter the lists on a platform of Christ and the Constitution."

The first predictions conceivably came true. Humorist Will Rogers died in a plane crash in August 1935, and Sen. Huey Long was assassinated a month later.

Pelley, of course, viewed himself as the third man in the prediction. He died in the 1960s, still under J. Edgar Hoover's watchful eye.

Who is responsible for all the killing?

To the Editor:

The controversy goes on — who is responsible for the deaths of: King, Kennedy and now Lennon? You must also include all the small children who on their way home from school, get murdered for no obvious reason.

There is no "obvious" or public mourning for Lisa Rosales. Only her family are lighting candles, and they are not marching down the Sunset Strip or playing Beatles' records. They are just heartbroken that someone would destroy a beautiful 7-year-old, a beautiful Black leader, a wonderful President.

Where does this all end? Who will take the responsibility for all this decadence? Will taking away guns from the public do it? (Doubtful).

Legislation is only effective with law-abiding citizens; what about the other faction? They get seven years at our expense and are released to repeat their previous errors.

So who is responsible for all this? I guess we are — would you believe?

Applause

To the Editor:

Re The Associated Press article titled "Man's for Animals," dated Sunday, Dec. 14, I would like to give a good round of applause for Michael Fox.

His enlightened attitude on the treatment of animals in this country, especially those used for human consumption, i.e. veal calves, chickens and swine, is one with which I can highly identify.

He is neither a vegetarian nor an antivivisectionist, but a humane, compassionate veterinarian.

Long may his banner wave!

MYRNA YOUNG

Misinformation

To the Editor:

With the death last week of John Lennon, who led, perhaps, the most public life of any man of the last 20 years, we were indeed shocked by the number of factual errors made by the news media regarding his life and career. For example:

— Several writers have cited the lyrics "the dream is over" (from Lennon's 1970 album "Plastic Ono Band") to sum up his death, incorrectly referring to it as a song title. The song in which those lyrics appeared was titled "God."

Cleave Herman, of KFWB radio, identified Paul McCartney as the Beatles' lead guitarist and George Harrison as their bassist. The reverse is true.

— CBS News identified George Martin as the manager of the Beatles. He was their producer.

Obviously, John Lennon should not be made out to be more than he actually was. (The rock press will undoubtedly be calling him a god.) However, he was in fact a great musician, composer, and tireless worker for peace and social justice. He cared about us. We only wish that the people reporting his death would have cared enough about him to chronicle his life accurately.

Gun laws

To the Editor:

Having just read your Dec. 10 editorial on "Guns Still Killing," I got a little mad. I wondered if you or your paper were aware of some of the following facts. First, all guns are registered with the federal government and have been for almost 12 years. (1968 Federal Gun Control Act.)

However, when it comes to handguns, they are registered with both the state and federal governments. The state of California has a 15-day mandatory waiting period on the purchase of a handgun, from the time of purchase to the time a person can pick up the gun.

DURING THIS time each person is run through the C.I.& I. (Criminal Identification and Investigation) computers in Sacramento to make it legal for him or her to purchase a handgun. The buyer must be able to pass both state and federal questions before being able to purchase and pick up (after 15 days) a handgun.

Also, any person who buys two or more handguns in a seven-day period has his or her name sent to the local federal A.T.F. (Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms) office. When any person purchases a handgun a copy of the state form is sent to that person's chief of police in the city or town they live in. At the present time, the state of California has on its books a law that makes it a five-year jail sentence if a handgun is used in the committing of a crime. This law or jail sentence is one of the first things thrown out by our liberal judges when a criminal who has used a handgun in a crime comes up before them. It's called plea bargaining.

Please, we have more than enough laws on the books at the present time; let's just enforce them. I feel just as bad as the next person when there are needless murders and killings, but I don't think more legislation is the answer. I feel we have a problem in the courts and the criminal justice system. Let's work on them.

Flag disgraced

To the Editor:

We were told at Louisiana Pacific on Bristol Street in Costa Mesa that their flag was at half mast for John Lennon!

This is a disgrace to our flag and our country and all the noble loyal citizens who put their lives on the line every day for America and her people.

I called the store and the general office and was informed that he was a national hero to some people. What a sick society — I knew it was bad, but this disgrace to our flag tops it.

Reason needed

To the Editor:

The possibility of school closures always arouses parents, but the subject need not be as emotional as the Daily Pilot portrayed it (Dec. 10).

The number one consideration is the education of each student: How can we offer the best program to our children within the constraints which face the district? The decision will be made in the near future.

Since Sept. 22, parents in the Corona del Mar zone have been meeting with school administrators and several members of the Board of Education to discuss various ways of maintaining quality education in an era of declining enrollment.

We call on you as a responsible newspaper to give coverage equally to the many thoughtful discussions that are going on, and to avoid sensationalizing emotional ultimatums, so that the community can come to a reasonable decision.

Out of place

To the Editor:

Why has our Costa Mesa Planning Commission granted a crematorium permit to the Harbor Lawn Cemetery on Gisler Avenue, just west of Harbor Boulevard?

In defiance of all logical and scientific reasoning, this 24-hour-per-day operation is spewing toxic wastes into an area already suffering from excessive pollution caused by the nearby San Diego freeway. Congested traffic conditions are always prevalent on Harbor Boulevard, at the freeway exit and entry ramps, a minimal distance from the crematory.

TOXIC wastes from the incineration of plastic-shrouded bodies; some additionally saturated with embalming fluids and other volatile chemical elements, create heavier-than-air fumes which all seek ground-level locations.

The implications are obvious. There are schools within the immediate area, many restaurants, doctors' offices for tending patients with respiratory problems and various other physical complaints. Most importantly — Mesa Verde is a residential, family community. The possible killer mixture of varied chemicals presents a danger that must be researched now, not later, when the damage is irreversible!
