

Pleasure trip turns tragic as 9 perish

HONOLULU (AP) — It was supposed to have been a two-hour, 23-mile pleasure cruise on a 20-foot cabin cruiser for 21 residents of the sparsely populated island nation of Kiribati.

Two months and 1,300 miles later, nine were dead and the other 12 had survived only by drinking rainwater or sea water and eating fish — including a shark — that they had caught with their bare hands.

The survivors were reported in good condition Sunday at a hospital on Moen Island in the Truk District of the U.S. Trust Territory of the Pacific. A hospital nurse said all 12 — including a 3-year-old boy — prob-

bably would be released and flown home in about a week.

The islanders had drifted helplessly in the Pacific Ocean for 60 days until they were spotted Friday by the helicopter of a San Diego-based tuna boat about 700 miles southeast of Guam.

The cramped cabin cruiser left Abaiang Island the morning of March 26 to bring the people to Tarawa, the capital of Kiribati, formerly known as the Gilbert Islands.

"A good term to describe the boat would be overcrowded," said Quartermaster Mike McKiernan, a Coast Guard spokesman on Guam.

But Cinrata Teaaene, a police constable on Tarawa, said it is not unusual for ships on short trips in Kiribati to be crowded because there is a shortage of boats in the poor island nation.

Most of the people on board for the two-hour trip were headed to Tarawa for a vacation, Teaaene said. The rest were bringing food to a market there.

But at one point the ship's only engine failed and the boat began drifting to the west, McKiernan said. As prevailing currents carried the boat through an area of few landfalls, the islanders lived on the goods that were being taken to the market.

The supply of fresh water lasted about four days; the food about two weeks, which was just about as long as the Kiribati Marine Guard hunted for the missing ship.

After that, funeral services were held for many of the missing.

"We searched, but we didn't know where to look," Teaaene said. "I think all the people thought they were dead, but hoped they were alive."

Once the initial supplies ran out, those on the ship survived by catching rainwater and fish with their bare hands, said Coast Guard spokesman Keith Spangler in Honolulu. He said their last fish, a shark, was caught two weeks ago.

"Each rainfall would provide enough water for about three or four days," he said. When no rain fell, the islanders drank sea water.

The Coast Guard has not yet been able to determine when people began dying on board the ship.

"That's something we're hoping to hear from the officials on Truk on Monday," McKiernan said Sunday. He said officials believe the bodies of the dead were buried at sea one by one.

Hatchet; butcher knife used in Anaheim attack; police seeking motive

An Anaheim man was jailed Sunday after police said he confessed to killing his father with a hatchet and butcher knife.

Charles Thomas Hudec, 25, was being held today in the Anaheim City Jail on $250,000 bail in connection with the death of his father, Frank Hudec, 62. Both lived at 2424 E. Tryon Ave. in Anaheim.

Investigators said today they haven't determined why the son allegedly attacked his father in their home, then stopped an officer in a patrol car about 3 a.m. to allegedly confess to the incident.

When police Sgt. Jack Parra and other officers reached the locked house, they heard a cry for help through a bedroom window, said Officer Dennis Sair.

The officers broke into the home and found the father on the bedroom floor with several stab and chop wounds, he said.

The father was taken to the UC Irvine Medical Center in Orange but died in surgery, Sair said.

A knife and hatchet believed to be used in the attack were found at the house, he said.

An investigator said Charles Hudec probably will be arraigned Tuesday in Municipal Court on murder charges.

Beirut beaches bloody

Syria soldiers, Christian militia kill civilians

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syrian soldiers and Christian militiamen rocketed, shelled and sniped at each other today in a second straight day of fighting that left at least 23 civilians dead and 276 injured, many of them on Beirut's beaches, police said.

A police spokesman said the Lebanese capital's Mediterranean shores, jammed with bathers, were a major target for the gunners Sunday. It was the first time the beaches had been shelled since the nation's 1975-76 civil war, and Beirut newspapers called the bombardment the "beach war."

Exchanges of artillery, rocket and gunfire between Moslem and Christian sectors of the Lebanese capital began late Saturday. They reached a crescendo at mid-afternoon Sunday and subsided to sporadic sniping at sundown.

But by midday today, the boom of heavy artillery had returned, and fires were burning in several residential neighborhoods. The Christian "Voice of Lebanon" radio said three Christian children, a 2-year-old boy and two sisters aged 3½ and 4½, were killed when a shell slammed into their home.

The casualties pushed the Lebanese toll to more than 550 dead since April 1.

Sniping and artillery duels also were reported in the Christian city of Zahle, 30 miles to the east in the Bekaa Valley, where a Christian attempt to open a military supply road ignited the Syrian-Christian fighting at the start of April and led to Syria's deployment of Soviet-made SAM-6 missiles at the end of the month.

Bombs tossed

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Gasoline bombs were tossed at three opposition party officers here today as South Africa observed its 20th anniversary as a white minority-ruled republic.

Israel is threatening to attack the missiles unless they are withdrawn. Syria refuses to take them out, and the dispute threatens to touch off a new Arab-Israeli war.

As U.S. envoy Philip Habib prepared to return to the Middle East to try again to resolve the Syrian-Israeli dispute over the missiles, Syria's foreign minister reiterated his government's refusal to remove them from Lebanon, and the leader of the Lebanese Christians fighting the Syrians said war is imminent.

The SAMs "are there to stay. They will not be withdrawn," declared Foreign Minister Abdul Halim Khaddam in an interview published Sunday in al-Khaleej, a newspaper in the United Arab Emirates.

"We are two fingers away from war, and I doubt it would be a small-scale war if it broke out," said Pierre Gamayel, leader of the Phalange Party, whose militia is the largest Lebanese Christian force.

Nude dancing ban rejected

WASHINGTON (AP) — Local governments cannot use their zoning powers to ban all live nude dancing, the Supreme Court ruled today.

By a 7-2 vote, the justices said such a comprehensive ban violates constitutional rights to freedom of speech and expression.

Today's case involved Mt. Ephraim, N.J., which banned within its boundaries all nude dancing and all other forms of live entertainment.

"In this case, Mt. Ephraim has not adequately justified its substantial restriction of protected activity. None of the justifications asserted in this court was articulated by the state courts and none of them withstands scrutiny," Justice Byron R. White said in an opinion for the majority.

White continued that it did not "appear that Mt. Ephraim's zoning authority has arrived at a defensible conclusion that unusual problems are presented by live entertainment."

In today's case, the high court overturned the 1978 convictions of James F. Schad and Juliette Ann DiLuciano on charges of offering live nude dancing as a form of entertainment at an establishment known as Six Thirteen. Each had been fined $300.

In other action today, the high court:

— Agreed to decide whether California or Texas gets to tax the Howard Hughes estate, valued at up to $1.1 billion. The high court must determine which state was Hughes' chief residence when he died April 5, 1976.

Blocked again the release of secret computer tapes that the government says could show tax cheaters how to avoid getting caught. The high court granted the government's request for a postponement of an appeals court order to turn the Internal Revenue Service material over to a Bellevue, Wash., couple.

— Agreed to decide whether Minnesota officials can scrutinize financial operations of the Rev. Sun Myung Moon's Unification Church. The justices will review a ruling that the state's strict financial reporting and disclosure requirements for religious groups like the Unification Church are unconstitutional.

— Rejected a challenge to Navy regulations that required the discharge of sailors who engage in homosexual acts. Government lawyers had noted that the disputed regulations already have been discarded.

— Ruled that penniless men trying to fend off paternity suits sometimes can force states to pay for blood-grouping tests. The justices unanimously struck down as unconstitutional Connecticut's policy of not providing such free tests when paternity defendants could not afford them.

In the nude dancing case, New Jersey appeals courts upheld the convictions and the borough's zoning ordinance as applied to Six Thirteen. The State Supreme Court refused to review the case last Jan. 18.

— Refused to halt an antitrust suit aimed at an international uranium cartel.

In asking for the rarely granted order, Gulf Oil Corp. and Gulf Minerals Canada Ltd., two of the defendants in the suit, claimed that the cartel is shielded from U.S. courts' scrutiny because its actions were "mandated" by the countries involved — Canada, France, South Africa and Australia.

2 aliens in fight; one dead

Santa Ana police investigators are searching today for a man who witnesses said shot and killed another man in what a detective called "basically a macho type situation."

Dead is Manuel Barrasa, 23, a laborer who lived in a Myrtle Street apartment complex. Police said they are searching for Sirilo Venegas, another laborer who lived nearby and allegedly fled in his car after the shooting.

Both men were from Mexico and had entered the United States illegally, said investigator Perrell Buckles.

He said several witnesses said the suspect, who allegedly was in a bad mood from another argument, started "bad-mouthing" Barrasa and some friends early Sunday morning.

Witnesses said the suspect pulled a knife on Barrasa, but when the victim came up with his own knife, the suspect left and returned with an automatic pistol, Buckles said.

Barrasa then was shot after he was challenged, the detective said. Barrasa was pronounced dead at the scene at 4:20 a.m. by paramedics, he said.

Spending cuts key to budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — While the administration sought to settle terms for a tax cut, President Reagan's budget chief said today that Congress will be guilty of "deliberate sabotage" if it doesn't stand by the federal spending cuts already approved in the House and Senate.

The tax and spending phases of Reagan's economic program both were at issue, at the White House and the Capitol.

A tax cut bill is likely this year even if Congress and the president cannot agree on a compromise. Congress would simply write one a step at a time and leave it to Reagan to accept or veto it.

The White House and the Democrats who have so far spurned an administration-endorsed compromise all say they want to reach a consensus before the tax-writing committees get down to business.

Another round of meetings between administration and congressional leaders is planned this week, starting with a White House session today involving Reagan and Democratic congressional leaders.

The committees that deal with federal spending ceilings were getting to work on detailed budget decisions. David A. Stockman, director of the Office of Management and Budget, said they are obligated to stand by the cuts of more than $35 billion that already have been endorsed by Congress.

He told a news conference that any deviation from those cuts "must be considered a deliberate sabotage of the expressed will of Congress and the people."

Fingerprints — airtight case for cops

By PHIL SNEIDERMAN

The unidentified burglar was dubbed "Fingers" by police detectives who found his prints on the windows of more than a dozen of the Huntington Beach homes he had invaded.

Finally, a patrol officer stopped a 15-year-old bicyclist who fit a rough description of the burglar. The youth was riding a stolen bicycle and carrying $230.

Inmates flee Georgia jail; six at large

SAVANNAH, Ga. (AP) — Inmates wielding a razor overpowered a guard and pressed a fire-door button, opening jail-cell doors at the new Coastal Correctional Institution and allowing 11 prisoners to escape, officials said.

Three didn't get far after the escape Sunday night, two were caught early today and six still were at large.

The incident occurred at 5:55 p.m. Sunday PDT when four prisoners overpowered an officer and pushed a button that opened doors to cells containing 95 inmates in one of the prison's living modules, said Sara Engle, a spokeswoman for the Georgia Department of Offender Rehabilitation.

Eighty-four prisoners stayed in the jail but 11 fled. The guard was uninjured, she said.

It was not immediately clear whether the four inmates who overpowered the guard were among those who escaped, Mrs. Engle said.

spotted the cabin cruiser, using several bedsheets as a makeshift sail, in waters north of Truk. Helicopters are often used by large fishing vessels to search for schools of fish from the air, McKiernan said.

The survivors were picked up by the fishing boat, transferred to a Trust Territory field ship and brought to Moen, McKiernan said.

A hospital nurse said the survivors were suffering from varying degrees of malnutrition and exposure, but were in "good shape, considering everything."

The teen's fingerprints were checked against a set compiled from burglary scenes by Steve Balloch and Kurt Kuhn, the Huntington Beach police identification specialists.

It was a perfect match. The prints tied "Fingers" to 17 burglaries, and he subsequently admitted to a dozen more. Police calculated "Fingers" was responsible for property losses of at least $25,000.

To Balloch and Kuhn, who spend long, often tedious hours studying the loops, whorls and arches left by fingers, palms and feet, there is a great satisfaction in making a solid link between a crime and a suspect.

"Fingerprints are a key in every case where you can get them," explains Kuhn. "They're the knock 'em dead evidence."

When a case comes to trial, memories may be imperfect and psychologists may offer conflicting testimony, but fingerprint evidence is difficult to challenge.

"Fingerprint identification is an exact science, like mathematics," observes Kuhn. "We can go into court and say this print belongs to this person."

Such evidence can be found on an assortment of objects.

Balloch and Kuhn say they've been asked to collect prints from beer cans, pieces of paper, weapons, bricks, rocks, disarmed bombs and bomb fragments, drug packets — and even from a pair of shoes.

A silver or black powder is applied to a smooth surface that may have picked up a print. The powder brings up a print by sticking to oils or perspiration or grease deposited by the friction ridges of a person's skin.

The print can be photographed and enlarged or lifted with a special tape.

The value of such evidence is that no two people share the same finger, palm or (bare) footprints.

Police do not always collect a full, unsmudged print. Specialists like Balloch and Kuhn must decide whether enough distinguishing characteristics are present.

"It's possible to have a large portion of a fingerprint and still not have enough detail to make an identification," Balloch explains. "But in some cases, a partial print the size of a pencil eraser's head can be enough."

Prints taken from the scene of a crime can be checked against the 80,000 prints on file at the Huntington Beach police station. These files include crime suspects arrested in the city, plus residents whose fingerprints are required for security work or weapons permits.

In addition, Huntington Beach investigators have access to prints on file with neighboring police agencies and with state and federal justice officials.

But when a suspect has no fingerprints on file, the investigation can be hampered.

Balloch recalls a series of 30 to 40 related rapes in Huntington Beach during a three-year period. The suspect had left many prints when he broke into women's homes, but police were unable to match the prints to anyone on file.

Eventually, police arrested a man on a simple prowling charge after a woman complained he was peeking in her window. The prowler's prints matched those in the series of rapes, and eventually the man was convicted.

Some identification techniques can be learned through college classes and FBI schools. But the Huntington Beach specialists said much comes from experience.

Balloch is a sworn police officer, a 15-year veteran of the Huntington Beach force who moved from crime scene investigation to identification work.

Kuhn is a civilian technician who studied criminalistics and learned identification work with the Long Beach and Los Angeles police departments.

More banks cut prime to 20%

NEW YORK (AP) — More major banks cut their prime lending rates to 20 percent today, and a smaller bank in St. Louis cut its rate even further amid talk that interest rates may have peaked.

Continental Illinois National Bank of Chicago and Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. of New York announced the cuts to 20 percent from 20.5 percent, matching a reduction made Thursday by Chase Manhattan Bank of New York and a few smaller banks. Other major banks were expected to follow.

In St. Louis, Southwest Bank cut its prime rate to 19.5 percent. The prime is the base rate charged by banks on loans to commercial and industrial customers.

The widespread feeling that rates may decline was aided by the report by the Federal Reserve Board late Friday that the nation's basic money supply fell for the second straight week.

"I feel interest rates have peaked and that we are probably in the process of a sustained decline," said Robert Schwartz, senior financial economist at Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc., the nation's largest investment firm, following that report.

Expectations that rates have peaked also caused the dollar to slip in trading against most major currencies. High interest rates make investments in dollars more attractive.

Reagans back after visit to Virginia

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan and his wife, Nancy, are back at the White House after a helicopter trip to the Virginia countryside for luncheon at the estate of James J. Kilpatrick.

Other guests at the Sunday affair in rural Scrabble included the ambassadors of Canada and Mexico; Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah; Virginia Republican Chairman Alfred Cramer and Robert Strauss, who managed former president Carter's reelection campaign against Reagan.

The menu included pate, whole salmon in aspic, "risi bisi" salad, marinated vegetables, corn muffins and strawberry tarts.

Khomeini line brings $800

NEW YORK (AP) — Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's autograph was sold Sunday for a record $800 to a collector who owns a signature of the late shah of Iran and is also trying to assemble autographs of all 52 former hostages, according to the auctioneer.

Herman Darvick, president of the Universal Autograph Collectors Club, said the Khomeini autograph was sold by one collector to another in bidding at the Abbey Victoria Hotel.

Both collectors requested anonymity, Darvick said. He said the previous record price for the autograph of a living person was $550, set about eight years ago for Howard Hughes' signature.

Deaths list misleads?

Atlanta murder count said to be leaving false perceptions

ATLANTA (AP) — Dubbed a "magic number" by critics, the count of murdered and missing young Atlanta blacks has spawned a false national perception of a single killer and underlined an impression of police failure, authorities say.

The cases being investigated by a special police task force include 28 young blacks slain since July 1979, plus a 10-year-old black youngster who disappeared last September. All remain unsolved.

Throughout the tragedy, public attention has focused on the soaring number of murdered and missing, but one source close to the investigation called the task force list "one of the biggest mistakes the police bureau ever made."

"No. 1, it gives every ignorant person in the world the impression that all of the homicides are connected," said the highly placed source, who asked not to be identified because of Public Safety Commissioner Lee Brown's insistence that investigators not talk about the probe.

"Two, it ensures the police will lose face when they don't make arrests in most of the cases. Three, it gives those mothers (of the victims) a special status and an excuse to collect money," he said.

The list was born with the creation of the task force last July. The police bureau, puzzled by an unsolved string of child slayings and anxious to reassure the public, created the task force and placed 10 names on the list — six slain and four missing black children.

Those cases differed — one victim had been shot, one stabbed, one bludgeoned, two strangled and one killed by unknown means — and police said then they had no evidence to show they were linked.

"The situation was different then. At the time, they (the victims) were young, they were black, and that's all investigators knew. There was an outcry, and there was a need to give them special attention," says District Attorney Lewis Slaton.

Faced now by a rising number of strikingly similar slayings, police are more discriminating in adding cases to the task force burden, Slaton said. Nearly all the victims joining the list in recent months have been asphyxiated black males.

The belief that police erred in placing some of the early slayings on the list has become widespread and investigators say evidence now suggests that several of the killings were isolated.

Fulton County Medical Examiner Robert Stivers, who suggested several months ago that the case of a 14-year-old strangled girl be added to the roster, said recently he has changed his mind.

"Back then, I didn't think the case necessarily was related. But I thought it wouldn't hurt to add it. She was black, she was a child, she was asphyxiated," Stivers said.

"It just strikes me now that they should be careful who they add to the list, or pretty soon we'll have every homicide in Georgia on there," he said.

The inclusion of some isolated slayings on the list provides ammunition for critics who want additional names added — such as that of Cynthia Montgomery.

The 14-year-old black girl, found strangled in a motel room last November, has been cited as a likely addition to the roster because of her race, her age, her death and her geographical and personal links to a few other victims.

The current list includes just two females — Latonya Wilson, 7, and Angel Lanier, 12. Both were put on the list when the special unit was formed, and police say privately they believe the cases are isolated.

Teleprompter TV technicians record scene in one of several video tapes police agencies in central Orange County are producing to enable their officers to understand the growing Indochinese community.

Political turbulence sweeping Europe

LONDON (AP) — The winds of political change which gave the United States an administration promising an abrupt shift in foreign and economic policy are blowing on this side of the Atlantic but unlike in Washington, no clear trend has emerged.

A half dozen countries are caught up in the turbulence, partly spawned by economic and terrorism problems on the home front and concern over NATO deployment of medium-range missiles in Europe. The continent hasn't seen such uncertainty in years.

The backdrop of this state of flux in the West is the nagging worry about eventual Soviet intentions in Poland — with the whole fate of East-West relations in the balance.

In the past several days, Italy's 40th post-war government collapsed under a scandal. The ruling coalition in the Netherlands was defeated. France scheduled crucial parliamentary elections that will test the strength of the leftward lean which voted in a Socialist president.

The Irish Republic faces elections that could lead to a change in prime ministers. Spain's political uncertainty, heaved to new heights with an attempted coup by right-wingers three months ago, simmers in the wake of the Barcelona bank siege and the suggestion there was a plot to kill King Juan Carlos.

West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt was defied by his party's left wing in narrowly winning support for his nuclear policies. Britain, with 12 straight months of increased unemployment, struggles with a flagging economy that helped deliver a new political force and a steadily exacerbating Northern Ireland problem.

Political observers are hard-pressed to detect any clear trend in these fast-moving changes.

A step to the left can be clearly defined in France, where Socialists, supported by Communists, have come to power after 23 years of center-right rule.

The elections for Parliament next month will define for President Francois Mitterrand how far and fast he can reasonably go with his socialist policies — and whether he will be obliged to take Communists into France's government, a member but not a military participant of NATO.

Pressure from the left for reversal of government policies or for a share in government is elsewhere.

In Italy, Christian Democrat Premier Arnaldo Forlani's coalition government collapsed in a scandal involving a secret Masonic lodge. Communist Party leader Enrico Berlinguer renewed his call for the Communists to be brought into the next government and the Socialists indicated they would push for a Socialist premier.

Thirty-five years of Christian Democrat rule in Italy, a member of NATO, is at stake.

Strong thunderstorms have drenched parts of the country from northern Alabama into South Carolina, and along the upper Texas coast into Louisiana. Funnel clouds were reported in parts of Texas and Louisiana.

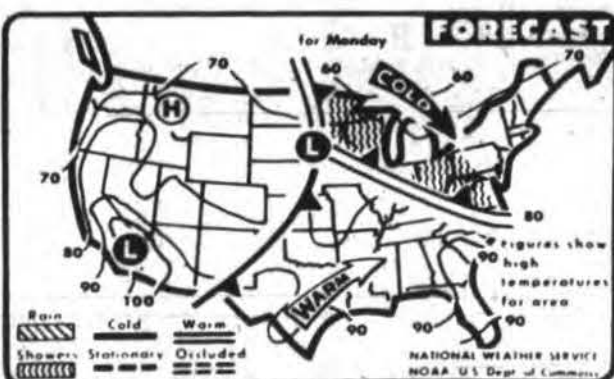

Hailstones the size of walnuts fell Sunday at Murphy, N.C., and as big as marbles at Huntsville, Ala., while power lines were knocked down near Albertville and Boaz, Ala.

A severe thunderstorm watch was in effect for part of the evening for an area from northern Alabama into western South and North Carolina. Widely scattered showers and thunderstorms extended from Arizona across the Rockies into western Texas and into the northern Plains and upper Mississippi Valley.

During the six hours ended at 11 a.m. PDT Sunday, 1.9 inches of rain fell at Galveston, Texas; Lafayette, La., got 0.75 inch.

Thunderstorms were reported from the lower Mississippi Valley into the Southeast, along the mid- and northern Atlantic Coast and over southern Florida. Highs were in the 80s and 90s from the Southeast through the Gulf Coast and Southwest; in the 50s across the Great Lakes, northern Rockies and Northwest; and in the 60s and 70s elsewhere.

Temperatures around the nation at noon ranged from a low of 54 at Ocoche, Mich., to a high of 99 at Palm Springs.

For today, more storms were forecast over the Plains and Great Lakes and from the lower Mississippi Valley into the Ohio Valley, the Appalachians and the mid-Atlantic states. Sunny skies were expected for the Southwest, West and Northwest, northern Rockies, the Northeast and Florida. Highs in the 80s and 90s were predicted from the Southeast to the lower Mississippi Valley, the Southwest and Intermountain region, and in the 60s and 70s elsewhere.

Bridging culture gaps

Tapes help cops understand Indochinese refugees

Of the Daily Pilot Staff

The film begins with several shots taken in one of the many Indochinese refugee neighborhoods in central Orange County.

Young children race their Big Wheels and bicycles on the sidewalk in front of the aging tenements where they live, while their mothers and grandmothers stand watching and chatting in the shade of the buildings.

The narration begins: "History has time and again shown us that the immersion of another culture into our society is not all that traumatic, and eventually it is accepted without a second thought."

"You have only to look at the many European immigrants who have settled here to find evidence that our country is truly a melting pot, and will bear the inclusion of yet another large resettlement of people from another country."

That's the tone of a series of video tapes now being produced by a coalition of law enforcement agencies called TOPAR, or Task Force on Police-Asian Relations.

With more than 65,000 Indochinese refugees already in Orange County — primarily in Garden Grove, Santa Ana and Westminster — and an additional 1,000 more arriving each month, the three city police departments decided something had to be done to enhance relations with the emerging ethnic community.

TOPAR was organized in November 1980 when there were few resources available to train police officers in communicating with Asian-Americans.

The group recently completed six video tapes to be shown to police and refugee organizations in cooperation with Teleprompter Cable Television Systems' public service program.

Two of the tapes are for police officers, and explain cultural differences to be considered when conducting home interviews, issuing traffic tickets, investigating accidents and administering drunken driving tests.

Four tapes for refugee audiences are now being edited, and will be distributed soon.

Each tape is being narrated in Vietnamese, Cambodian and Laotian. The tapes' purpose is to help orient the refugees on what may be expected of police, and explain their role in American society.

The two police officer training tapes were shown at a presentation sponsored by TOPAR and Teleprompter last Thursday at the Garden Grove Community Center.

The first tape explains why some Indochinese refugees may be hesitant to make contact with a police officer.

The narrator asks the officers to imagine that in their old country "the police were not respected, and in some cases feared."

"In fact, many policemen in Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos were poorly educated, lacked Western moral scruples, abused their power, were easily bribed and often extorted others."

The narrator also asks police to remember that in Asian households the father dominates the home and to address him first when conducting an interview.

Cultural practices such as "coin rubbing" are also discussed. Rubbing a coin on the back of the neck is believed by some to cause the "bad air" or spirit to leave an ailing person.

In the past, the marks left by the coin have been misinterpreted as fingernail scratches by police officers who noticed them on the necks of small children.

"Blood drawn to the skin surface by rubbing might appear to be child abuse," the tape narration says. "But examining and understanding this cultural tradition should discount this."

After viewing TOPAR's "New Neighbors New Friends" tape series, Westminster Police Chief Jack Shockey said police officers have a special responsibility in dealing with Indo-Chinese refugees.

"We are the most visible arm of government, and will represent to these people the morals and political system of our country," Shockey said.

"As police officers we must be consistent in our actions. The educational program that will accompany these tapes should help us bridge the cultural gap between us and these new Americans."

'Music angel' missed

Death of popular teacher leaves pupils with scars

MARLBORO TOWNSHIP, N.J. (AP) — Karen A. Costello is well remembered at Marlboro Elementary school, where some children call her their "music angel." Some youngsters also routinely mutilate pictures of the man accused of killing the 23-year-old teacher in a $3 robbery-abduction.

The 500 children at Marlboro share a common grief with 27 third graders in Pleasantville and 40 pupils at Piscataway's Wee People Pre-School: Their teachers were slain. And psychologists say the children are among the often overlooked victims of violent crime.

Ms. Costello was a popular singing teacher who was known to nearly all the students at Marlboro. In hundreds of letters to her parents and in interviews, the first through fifth graders revealed poetic recollections of the young woman and anger toward her alleged killer.

"When a friend called me and told me she was shot, I made my Dad get me a paper. I couldn't believe it. I couldn't get to sleep that night," said 9-year-old Elise Labott. "I still feel like shooting him (the suspect)."

Fifth grader Kim Kaufman said she felt "nauseous" after her teacher was slain Feb. 21, and Rachel Werlin wrote that she had visions of Ms. Costello as "an angel watching us cry."

In a common reaction, Cindy Redmin said she told her parents: "You don't expect it to happen to you where you live, maybe in New York, but not somebody you know."

Dr. Arnold Lazarus, a Rutgers University professor and founder of the Multimodal Therapy Institutes in New York and Princeton, said the impact of a teacher's slaying would vary; "but, clearly, it has an impact on most children; some can switch it off, others will carry scars for a long time."

Educators at the three schools said they were surprised at how quickly word spread of the killings — and their grisly details.

SLAIN TEACHER
Karen Costello

Barbara Zitomer, director of the Wee People Pre-school, said all the 4- and 5-year-olds in 26-year-old Deborah Friedman's class knew she had been killed Jan. 4 when they arrived at school the next day. Prosecutors called her slaying a "Looking For Mr. Goodbar" case. A man has pleaded guilty in the killing.

In Pleasantville, Rose Quarles' third graders came to Main Street School with tears in their eyes April 16, aware their 47-year-old teacher had been slain the night before and that her son was charged with her shotgun murder.

"She used to look like Wonder Woman sometimes," lamented 9-year-old Lamont Richardson. "I tell you, she made us learn. I couldn't believe... she was shot in the head."

Trudie Humley, who took over Mrs. Quarles' class, said she tried to talk to the children about the killing. At the Wee People school, a developmental psychologist was called in to speak to parents. And at Marlboro, there were memorial services and many discussions.

"I think talking about it is necessary," said Dr. Edward Docherty, another Rutgers psychologist. "Kids spend a good deal of their time in school and teachers are like parent figures to them."

"Many of our children already have a sense of pervasive fear because of what is happening in Atlanta. For these children (in New Jersey), there are some who can dismiss the deaths with what we call the magical thinking of children. But the death of a teacher forces them to deal at least with the reality that death brings absence, loss," said Docherty.

He said the children's reactions could include fear of being alone, an increased sense of vulnerability and anger.

"This is an area we need to talk more about," Docherty said. "But I think it is very important that we do not, as we often do, deny the children an opportunity for an outpouring of grief."

Some of the children's reactions were still apparent months after the deaths.

"A friend of mine brings in pictures of the suspect and puts it on the floor and jumps on it, and then cuts it up," said Elise. "I know that's not right, but it hurts so much."

Not all educators feel frank discussion is necessarily the best thing for children. Barbara Zitomer, the pre-school director, said she was content that "simple terms, such as it was an absence that would be final," was sufficient explanation for most children.

But, said Lazarus: "You have to keep in mind that even adults have difficulty coping with these things. For children, who do not have as much experience, it can leave a variety of scars. Death is all around us, and those who don't talk about it are asking for trouble."

Pregnant girls seek aid

In Massachusetts, judges rule on abortion pleas

BOSTON (AP) — "Mary Moe" was pregnant — and scared. At 16, she'd already had a child, and her father had threatened to kick her out of the house if she had another baby.

Feeling both parents would refuse to permit an abortion, Mary had only one choice if she didn't want the baby: she had to go to court.

Mary is one of several dozen Massachusetts teens who have contacted judges for permission to have an abortion since the state's tough, new abortion consent law for minors took effect a month ago.

The law requires unmarried, pregnant minors to get written permission from both parents to receive an abortion. The only alternative for the minor is to convince a Superior Court judge that she is mature enough to make a decision on her own or that the operation clearly is in her best interest.

"The burden placed upon a judge is awesome," Judge Chris Byron wrote in his recent decision in the case of Mary Moe — a pseudonym used in court papers for a girl whose identity is being kept secret.

"It is questionable that any 16-year-old girl is of such maturity to make such a momentous and possibly traumatic decision in her young life," Byron said.

Despite his reservations, Byron allowed the girl to have the operation, as virtually all judges have done since the law went into effect. His decision initially was sealed under privacy laws, but later was attached to public court documents in new challenges to the consent law.

"This law has made it a living hell for young girls, filled them with guilt trips," says Bill Baird, a longtime abortion crusader whose lawsuits tied up the consent law in the courts for years. "Kids are literally frightened to death by the prospects of going to both of their parents or trying to find their way around a courtroom."

Baird said he was especially upset because New Jersey, New York and other states have used Massachusetts' law as a model for similar legislative proposals.

Massachusetts has been trying to find a legal way to restrict abortions since 1974. After the U.S. Supreme Court declared the state's abortion consent law unconstitutional in 1979, the Massachusetts Legislature followed the high court's guidelines in drafting a new version of the law.

Several rounds of appeals followed. The law went into effect April 23 after the state Supreme Court rejected an eleventh-hour appeal by Baird and Planned Parenthood to impose a restraining order until another trial could be held.

Baird and Planned Parenthood of Massachusetts have four challenges to the law pending in federal and state court.

Women on campus outnumbering men

WASHINGTON (AP) — For the first time ever, there are more women than men undergraduate college students, a National Center for Education Statistics report on college enrollment said.

Women also accounted for 46.1 percent of the enrollment in graduate schools and 25.2 percent of the students in "first professional degree" programs like law and medicine.

In 1971, 41.3 percent of the 8.6 million college students were women. Eight years later, there were 4.4 million women undergraduates, 50.3 percent of the total. By 1980, enrollment was 11.7 million, 50.7 percent of whom were women.

During 1979, women received 48.3 percent of the bachelor's degrees, 49.1 percent of the master's degrees, 13.8 percent of the doctorate degrees and 23.6 percent of the first professional degrees.

And, though education remained the most popular field for women working toward degrees, they were taking a greater interest in non-traditional subjects.

At the undergraduate level, for example, women were, also for the first time, more diversified than men in choice of degree field. Some 66 percent of the females were concentrated in six fields of study, including education, 20.8 percent; business and management, 12; health, 11.4; social science, 10.2; psychology, 5.9, and fine and applied arts, 5.7 percent.

Men were slightly more concentrated with 67.4 percent of them in six fields, including business and management, 25.2 percent; social sciences, 13.2; engineering, 12; education, 7.1; biological sciences, 6.1, and physical sciences, 3.8 percent.

While enrollment increased 35 percent from 1971-1978, the enrollment of women rose 67 percent. "Clearly the increased participation of women in higher education has been a major aspect of the overall growth in college enrollments," the report found.

Africa memos rapped

Plans to warm relations with South Africa told

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration believes it is possible to restore South Africa's place as an "important regional actor with whom we can cooperate" provided she eases her white supremacist policies and moves to end control over Namibia, according to confidential documents.

The State Department documents, made available to The Associated Press, offer a rare glimpse into official administration thinking as it examined the conflicting pressures affecting policy toward South Africa and southern Africa in general.

They make clear that the administration would like to see an end to South Africa's "polecats status" in the world, and begin, instead an era of "friendship and cooperation."

The leak drew a sharp reaction from the State Department. Spokesman David Passage said an attempt to influence foreign policy by leaking documents is equivalent to a code clerk leaking documents to a foreign power because he disagrees with his government's policy.

Passage said an urgent investigation is under way to try to determine who was responsible for the leak.

Meanwhile, at the Capitol, Rep. Arlen Erdahl, R-Minn., said the newly disclosed memos as well as recent Reagan administration statements give the impression that "we are getting a bit more cozy than we need to be" with South Africa.

"There's just no way we can accept or tolerate their (apartheid) policy," said Erdahl, a member of the House foreign affairs subcommittee on Africa.

He added that "we should continue to lean on them diplomatically and economically" to promote democratic change within South Africa and peaceful settlement of the Namibia problem.

Another Africa subcommittee member, Rep. Stephen J. Solarz, D-N.Y., said the disclosure had him "very much concerned about an apparent drift in American policy towards South Africa."

"The problem with the administration's approach is that it greatly underestimates the degree to which closer relations with South Africa will create political problems for the United States with the rest of Africa and in the Third World," Solarz said.

The documents depict South Africa as a potential ally in assisting U.S. attempts to limit Soviet penetration in southern Africa.

But they also suggest an awareness that any close U.S. identification with South Africa would be politically impossible without an easing of racial discrimination in that country.

The memos also reflect South Africa's doubts about American resolve in preventing the spread of Marxism in the region and its mistrust for the United States based on past hostility.

Taken together, the memos suggest a downgrading of American preoccupation with the race issue in South Africa compared with the Carter administration and a new emphasis on a potential South African role as a defender of Western interests.

The documents were made available by Randall Robinson, director of Trans Africa, an anti-apartheid private research group based in Washington. Robinson did not disclose how he obtained the documents.

As Robinson sees it, the documents "clear up any remaining shadow of a doubt that the United States is moving rapidly toward an open and obvious alliance with military dimensions with South Africa in exchange for no commitment on South Africa's part for any substantial movement on their domestic viciousness."

"I think it ought to be alarming to the American people that this country is now clearly on a path toward this kind of relationship with perhaps the most vicious nation in the world since Nazi Germany," Robinson said.

Punishment sought for genetic scientist

WASHINGTON (AP) — A California scientist who used an experimental genetic treatment on patients overseas violated federal research rules and should face disciplinary action, concludes an investigating committee.

In a report released late last week, the group called for an unprecedented review of Dr. Martin J. Cline's research grants to determine if he should continue to receive funds from the National Institutes of Health for his work.

The panel, established by NIH solely to investigate Cline's case, also recommended that he be required to obtain prior NIH approval for any future research he conducts involving either humans or gene-splicing techniques.

Dr. Donald S. Fredrickson, NIH director, said he accepted all the committee's recommendations and has ordered them implemented.

"My examination of the report leads me inexorably to agreement with the conclusion that Dr. Cline has violated both the letter and the spirit of proper safeguards to biomedical research," Fredrickson said in a statement.

Cline, a professor of medical oncology at UCLA, could not be reached for comment. He received a draft of the report last month, but declined to comment on it for the committee.

Because of the debate over his conduct, Cline in February resigned as chief of the hematology-oncology division at UCLA's Center for the Health Sciences.

The controversy surrounds pioneering work in using genetic engineering to treat a fatal, inherited blood disease called beta thalassemia major.

Cline won acclaim last spring when he and other UCLA colleagues successfully transferred new genes into the blood-producing bone marrow cells of living mice.

This raised the possibility of genetically altering defective marrow cells to make them work correctly. With thalassemia, patients are unable to produce normal hemoglobin, the blood molecule that carries oxygen to the body's tissues.

Although Cline said at the time that human trials were three years away, he treated two patients three months later. A 21-year-old woman was treated July 10-11 in Jerusalem and a 16-year-old girl on July 15 in Naples, Italy.

Both patients were reported alive and well after the procedure, but there is yet no evidence that new genes inserted into their defective marrow cells have improved their conditions.

The operations were performed less than two weeks before UCLA's human subjects committee rejected Cline's proposal to try the treatment on campus with victims of sickle cell anemia, another inherited blood disorder.

UCLA said the rejection was not because of undue risk to patients, but because it felt more animal work was needed to validate the procedure.

Cline later said that in his judgment, the procedure was ready to be used in terminally ill patients.

Because of questions raised by the experiment, NIH informed UCLA last September that it would investigate the case to see if its funds were used properly and if Cline had abided with federal regulations.

The committee report said Cline used genetic engineering materials developed with NIH funds to do unapproved human work abroad, a violation of NIH recombinant DNA research guidelines.

The report also said Cline violated human subject research requirements by not getting UCLA approval for human work in Israel and Italy.

The patients and their families approved the experimental treatment. However, the report said, no human subjects committee in Italy approved that experiment and Cline used a different procedure than the one approved by an Israeli review group.

"We believe that Dr. Cline's conduct warrants disciplinary action," the report concluded.

PROMISES — Confronted by protesting Vietnam veterans in Los Angeles, U.S. Atty. Gen. William French Smith said he'd pass their concerns on.

Cancer treatment earns prison term

AUBURN (AP) — A 77-year-old man who claimed his unorthodox treatments could cure cancer has been sentenced to 15 years to life in state prison and sued for $4.5 million by the widow of one of his patients.

Last month a Placer County jury convicted Stanley Burroughs of North Auburn of second-degree murder in the death of Lee Swatsenbarg, a leukemia victim under his care, and of practicing medicine without a license and selling unlicensed medical devices.

Superior Court Judge Wayne Wylie, who presided over the trial, imposed the sentence. Swatsenbarg's widow, Shelley, filed a $4.5 million civil suit against Burroughs.

Pay hike pushed by Speaker Brown

SACRAMENTO (AP) — Assembly Speaker Willie Brown is proposing a 5 percent pay raise for himself and his colleagues in the Legislature.

Brown, D-San Francisco, has sent reporters a statement saying the 5 percent raise, from $28,100 to $30,921 a year, compares to the current inflation rate of 11 percent, and "is less than that which we are proposing for other groups, including state employees," who are being offered 6 percent.

The proposal was introduced in the form of a bill, AB2240. The raise wouldn't go into effect until Dec. 6, 1982, the start of the next two-year session.

"While it is clear that a 5 percent increase will not enable legislators to keep up with the increased cost of living, it will at least help defray some of the rising costs that legislators, like all Californians, are experiencing," Brown said.

Steven Throop sits with his mother, Juanita, after winning an $8.3 million settlement in San Jose.

Amputee gets $8.3 million

WASHINGTON (AP) — A college student, now a triple amputee, has won an out-of-court settlement from Conrail that will give him an estimated $8.3 million during his lifetime for injuries he suffered when he brushed against a high-voltage power line.

Steven Throop, 16, will get the money in monthly payments, bonuses every five years and money to be held in trust until he becomes 35, his lawyers said. It was believed to be one of the largest settlements in a personal injury case.

Throop, who lives in a foster home and studies marine biology at Cabrillo Junior College in California, was severely burned by an 11,000-volt wire when he climbed atop a boxcar to get a better view of Fourth of July fireworks on a family vacation trip in 1978.

His lawyers contended the railroad was negligent because the track was not fenced and there was no warning of a high-voltage wire, only faded "no trespassing" signs on poles.

Throop underwent about a dozen operations, according to Thomas Rees of Washington, one of his lawyers, and eventually lost both legs at the knees and his right arm at the elbow.

Richard Alexander of San Diego, another of Throop's attorneys, said, "It's cheaper for them to defend these lawsuits, even paying the same kind of money they paid (the $8.3 million to Throop), than to upgrade the property. I wish they would put some money in prevention."

Bill Wilson, a railroad spokesman in Philadelphia, confirmed the case had been settled but declined to discuss financial details. He said the railroad fences its yards but not single tracks like the one that runs through the Washington vacant lot where Throop was burned.

Bill would boost car pools

SACRAMENTO (AP) — A proposal to give extra tax credits to persons who participate in car pools has been sent to the state Assembly on a 27-9 Senate vote.

Sen. Nicholas Petris, D-Oakland, said his SB320 is part of a package of five bills aimed at encouraging ridesharing programs.

It would raise an estimated $6 million annually by putting a cap at $84 annually on gasoline tax deductions allowed on state income tax returns, and give that money in tax breaks to car pool participants.

Development pressure hits old dump sites

Pressures to build on more Orange County lands create strange requests, and one of the latest involves the increased use of four county-run landfills.

When they were excavated, the landfills weren't considered by county officials as anything except repositories where recently generated trash would pile up. What was tossed in a garbage can one day would end up covered in a landfill a few days later.

But suddenly the Orange County Board of Supervisors is pressed to make new policy decisions on the landfills. The issue is whether material in former dumps should be moved in large quantity to the present landfills.

Developers want to erect buildings on some of the 90 identified former dump sites in the county. Before they do, however, they have to get rid of the uneven piles of garbage and refuse that are buried under the surfaces in order to reach a solid building base. They want to move the material to existing landfills.

Since the county doesn't charge for dumping fees at its landfills, its current facilities could get filled quickly — and at a high cost to taxpayers — if the practice is allowed.

The supervisors instead should institute suitable tonnage fees for high volume dumping. The fees should be high enough to pay for new landfills should existing ones fill prematurely.

A coastal victory

Gov. Jerry Brown won a small victory for California last week when a U.S. District judge responded to a suit filed by Brown and five state agencies by granting an injunction to halt the awarding of oil leases in 32 tracts in the Santa Maria Basin off San Luis Obispo County.

The suit charged that Secretary of Interior James Watt had violated several federal statutes, including the Coastal Zone Management Act, in agreeing to the leases without sufficient consultation with state authorities.

They were among several sales that had been rejected by former Secretary Cecil Andrus on grounds the oil potential was not sufficient to offset probable environmental and commercial damage to coastal areas.

Watt reversed the Andrus ruling after he assumed office this year.

The suit charges violation of a federal provision that federal offshore activities that directly affect a state's coastal zone must be consistent with the state's coastal management plan, in this case the California Coastal Act.

It did not challenge leasing in 79 other tracts in the initial auction. And the judge authorized opening of bids for the lease sales after federal attorneys said their decision to challenge the suit would depend upon whether or not bids were received for any of the disputed tracts. The state contends only 8 percent of the basin's estimated oil reserves are in these tracts.

Judge Marian Pfaelzer rightly noted that the cumulative impact on the state's coastal management program can most effectively be determined in the pre-leasing period.

Once tracts have been leased, each plan can only be challenged on its potential individual effect on the coast, without regard to other offshore oil activities.

Since Watt's blanket decision to open up offshore oil leasing along some of the most sensitive areas of the Central and Northern California coast was made without consultation with the state, the governor's suit is very much in order — and the judge's ruling may at least open the way for more state participation in leasing decisions.

Sacramento money tree

Up in Sacramento the right hand clearly doesn't know — or care — what the left hand is doing.

Senate and Assembly budget subcommittees have approved a budget for the state Legislature and its 2,000 employees of $101.6 million for the coming year. That's 27 percent higher than last year's budget and it's the first time the Legislature will cost taxpayers more than $100 million for a year's operations.

This doesn't include projected 6 percent pay raises that would bring the total to $105 million, or 31 percent above last year's figure.

Meanwhile, the Legislature's budget analyst, William Hamm, has prepared a "hit list" that shows how some $1.2 billion could be saved in state spending cuts.

His hits are listed as having "relatively little," "more significant" and "the greatest" adverse impact on state programs.

Hardest hit would be health and welfare, public schools and California colleges and universities.

Under Hamm's proposals, the biggest cut would be in the college and university systems — $305 million, of which some $200 million would have "greatest adverse impact." This would include student tuition charges.

Of a proposed $227 million cut for public schools, Hamm says $221 million would have "little" adverse impact since it would include $142 for deferred maintenance and $2.4 million formerly needed for busing in the Los Angeles school system.

A proposed $245 million cut in health and welfare programs would fall into Hamm's "greatest adverse impact" category.

But while Hamm is sharpening his red pencil, the lawmakers apparently have quite forgotten that Assembly Speaker Willie Brown earlier this month vowed the Legislature's budget would not grow by even as much as 20 percent.

Someone should introduce these public servants.

L.M. Boyd / Love and memory

"Man loves little and often, women much and rarely." A fellow named Basta said that. It is in our Love and War man's files next to the report that the average man falls in love five times, average woman twice. And there's a footnote: Men as they age tend to cut down in memory the number of their past loves, but women are inclined to recall them all and then some.

Consider this sign: "Ergophobia — Intensive Care Unit." That particular phobia word means not just a mild fear but a deep dread of any sort of work. On the door of which room in your house, if any, should it be posted?

The South African bird known as the hornbill seals his mate inside a hollow tree. Uses a mud cement. Leaves just enough opening to in with his bill. He doesn't chip out the crusty barrier to free her until the eggs hatch. This I've read repeatedly. Nowhere to be found, however, is any explanation of what happens to her if he gets killed while she's still walled up in there.

Soviets push 'Star Wars' race

WASHINGTON — The United States and Soviet Union are engaged in a deadly race to develop "Star Wars" weapons, like laser beams and man-made lightning bolts. The top-secret plans call for mounting them aboard future spaceships.

Indeed, the space shuttle Columbia may be the forerunner of future Galactica-like battleships that may cruise in space. But if the United States is ahead in developing a reusable spaceship, the Kremlin's scientists may have the edge in other crucial areas of research.

Now that the Soviet Union has apparently caught up in the sophistication of its strategic missiles, the Reagan administration is likely to decide that the United States should concentrate on keeping ahead in the field of laser technology. One intelligence expert, who attended a secret laser briefing called it "the hottest briefing in town."

WHAT MAKES these "directed energy" weapons so hot is that they are expected to make strategic missiles obsolete within the next 20 years. Laser beams can be thwarted by clouds and other atmospheric disturbances, but a similar ray gun called a "particle beam weapon" would be virtually unstoppable. Both super-powers are trying to perfect them.

"The Soviets have had a research program under way since 1970 aimed at developing lasers with weapons applications," reports a top-secret Central Intelligence Agency document. The CIA identified several possible Soviet laser ranges and one probable — at Golovino, about 100 miles east of Moscow. "It is similar in length and layout to U.S. high-energy laser test ranges," the CIA explained, adding:

"Similar U.S. programs suggest that the kinds of tests most likely energy laser (HEL) programs are roughly equal at the present time," the secret report says, "although the U.S. is believed to have an advantage in the pointing, tracking, optics and control technologies."

THE RUSSIANS appear to be ahead in short pulse lasers and electrical discharge lasers, which could be useful for military applications in the atmosphere.

As for the awesome particle-beam weapons, the report says the Soviet Union is believed to have had a research and development effort under way for possibly 20 years.

Charged particle beam devices, or CPBs, represent "a new phase in the historical development of technology," the study reports. When perfected, these controlled "lightning bolts" can solve a wide range of scientific and industrial problems, the report states.

But it adds ominously: "Soviet work (on CPBs) is strong in exactly those areas needed for weapons application — whereas U.S. work to date has not been pointed toward military applications."

The report continues: "It is believed that the Soviets are ahead of the U.S. in many other critical PBW technologies... and that the present Soviet level of effort should permit them to continue to advance in these technology areas at a rapid rate."

performed at these sites are those most suitable for ground or air-based defense, including air-to-air combat, although the results would also be useful for programs concerning anti-ballistic missile, anti-satellite or laser-guided munitions."

Who's ahead? An assessment of the U.S.-Soviet balance in laser and other directed-energy weapons is contained in a highly classified study conducted last year by the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. It was shown to my associate Dale Van Atta.

"Overall, the U.S. and U.S.S.R. high

Sports scene short of real heroes

Is it me or are there a dull bunch of stars on the sports scene right now?

I'm not a big fight fan but I can't remember a time since I was 8 years old when I didn't know who the heavyweight boxing champion was, but I couldn't tell you who he or she is now. Someone says "Mike Weaver." Mike Weaver?

Who is the highest-paid player in baseball right now? Babe Ruth? Lou Gehrig? Mickey Mantle? Willie Mays? No. They don't play anymore. It's Dave Winfield. Tell me 10 things you know about Dave Winfield. He must be a wonderful baseball player but I don't know a single thing about him except that he makes more money than any of the others.

EACH OF US HAS to be careful about taking our sports heroes from a time in our past when sports heroes meant more to us than they do now and then sticking with them no matter who else comes along. I know that and I try to be careful not to do it, but no one can tell me that Joe Louis wouldn't have destroyed whoever the heavyweight boxing champion is now. I like swimming, too, and the national champion may be swimming 100 meters faster than Johnny Weissmuller swam 100 yards but whoever it is hasn't caught the popular imagination the way Weissmuller did.

Even the racehorses are dull. Every year at Kentucky Derby time I usually get interested and become familiar with the names of a few good horses. This year I'd heard of Cure The Blues and two or three others. Cure The Blues finished 15th in the Derby. Just give me a minute or two and maybe I'll think of the name of the winner. It wasn't Secretariat or Whirlaway, I'll tell you that.

Bruce Lietzke won the last big golf tournament I read about. I hesitate to knock someone I don't know, and Bruce may be a great golfer and a very nice person who's good to his mother, but he isn't Ben Hogan, Arnie Palmer or Jack Nicklaus.

IT'S HARD TO PUT your finger on what quality it is that attracts your attention to a sports figure but none of the golfers winning tournaments this year seem to have it. I watched Tom Watson win the Masters on television and he seems like an extraordinarily normal person without any falseness about him but he lacks those characteristics that attract a crowd. If you're not a golf nut, he doesn't interest you.

The tennis people are boring. Except for the bizarre revelation by Billie Jean King that she's had a homosexual relationship with another woman, both men's and women's professional tennis is thoroughly uninteresting. And I'm a sports nut, mind you. I read the sports pages first.

But do we really need another tennis tournament to prove that Martina Navratilova can beat Virginia Wade? Do 50 players have to spend another week in the sun to determine for the 100th time that both John McEnroe and Bjorn Borg can beat Vitas Gerulaitis and Guillermo Vilas? Borg is about as interesting as a panel discussion with the No. 3 and No. 4 men at the State Department for Latin American Affairs under Gerald Ford.

THE BOSTON CELTICS basketball team has one very interesting star, Larry Bird. He plays the game exceedingly well but the sad fact is that one of the things that makes him stand out as much as his excellence is his color. He's a blond white man in what has become essentially a black athlete's sport. Bird is articulate enough, but nowhere near as interesting or as bright as Arthur Ashe was as a black man in what has so far been almost exclusively a white man's sport, tennis. We're in sad shape when the color of an athlete is a matter of much interest.

Just to prove to you that I'm not a victim of my age as far as my opinion of sports stars go, I'll tell you I think Earl Campbell would have run circles around Red Grange and still got to the goal-line first.

Smart politics not always good government

How do you separate good government from smart politics? It's only a rhetorical question, because I don't think anybody has the answer, in our system, at least. We just go bumbling along, hoping for the best, and prepared for the worst, which we usually get.

What prompted this melancholy thought was a veto last year by Gov. Dreyfus of Wisconsin, which the want to be told. The youths, for the most part, don't vote, the parents, for the most part, do. Ergo, when a governor or other elected official wants to ingratiate himself with the voters, he goes where the votes are.

This may be, as they say, smart politics. But it is rotten public administration. Its aim is not to get the kids off drugs, even though many of them want to, but to make the parents feel that the government is on their "side." Of course, this official attitude only further alienates the young people from the political and social establishment.

SYDNEY HARRIS

legislature failed to override. The provision he vetoed would have allowed some school officials to refer students to drug counseling agencies without notifying their parents.

ACCORDING TO my children and their friends — who, knock on wood, are not anywhere in that scene — the great majority of youths will not seek help for their drug or alcohol problems if they believe that their parents will learn about it. Just as most pregnant girls will not confide in their family until they have exhausted every other remedy.

Here is the rub. The youths don't want to be snitched on, but the parents be lost, when parents are notified of this.

YET, THIS governor — and no doubt others like him — vetoes such a provision with the certain knowledge that he is mortally wounding the drug program where it is most needed, for no other real reason than to garner the support of the parents. On Election Day, this strategy will pay off; but every other day of the year, it consigns thousands of young people to the continuing peril of drug abuse. Why must our system make it so hard to be a good person and a good politician at the same time?

Today, United California Bank changed the face of banking forever. And our name, too.

From this day forward, banking will never be the same.

Because this is the day that the face of banking changed forever.

The day banking got easier and more convenient for Westerners.

The day we at UCB changed our name along with 20 other Western banks to form the First Interstate Bank system throughout the West — a network of banks serving people in nearly 900 offices in 434 communities throughout an 11-state territory.

So from this day on, our new name is the First Interstate Bank.

Naturally, we've got the same offices and the same good people, and the same friendly service we had when our name was UCB.

The big difference is that now we're part of a network of First Interstate Banks in the West.

Come on in and help us celebrate.

It's a new beginning for us.

And for you.

Introducing First Interstate Bank

The first and only bank system that can serve you throughout an 11-Western state territory.

An exhilarating evening with 'El Rayo-X,' David Lindley

By JEFF PARKER
Of the Daily Pilot Staff

Jackson Browne's music has always had a distinctive sound to it — an electrified, screeched-out guitar backing that comes out at surprising times and places. The man responsible is David Lindley, who has taken the lap slide guitar places no one expected it to go. Lindley brought his band to the Golden Bear Thursday night for two sold-out performances before taking his show on the road with Joe Walsh later this month.

Lindley built the concert around his recently released first album, "El Rayo-X," a precise, exhilarating collection of twelve songs written by several contributors. The album came as a bit of a shock to Lindley fans expecting a tour de force of his unique slide guitar work and masterful six string guitar licks. Heavily reggae influenced, "El Rayo-X" is a polished, controlled and brilliantly conceived record. With Lindley on vocals and an assortment of guitars, "El Rayo-X" is an attempt to forge a fresh, international music from diverse influences — reggae, rhythm and blues, Cajun folk style, Mexican folk music and a bit of rock.

Lindley's music isn't linear, single-minded stuff, rather it overlaps, interweaves and interlocks various instruments and rhythms. It's melodious but unpredictable too, and you get the feeling after hearing a song like "Your Old Lady" (the Motown song) or "Pay the Man" (written by Lindley and percussionist George Pierre) that you've heard it before — but not quite the same way. For two straight hours Thursday night, Lindley worked his way through the music, carrying it almost exclusively with his guitar, and never hit a familiar lick. I don't know of anyone else, except maybe Ry Cooder, who could have taken the rock standard "Twist and Shout" and put such a subtle third-world flavor to it. The song was born again, improved, revitalized.

Lindley drew on songs by such diverse writers as Smokey Robinson, Jorge Calderon (who played bass), Huey "Piano" Smith and Bob Fizz Fuller, a disabled Vietnam veteran now living in Claremont. Fuller's "She Took Off My Romance," and "Quarter of a Man" came off especially well, as did "Don't Look Back" and "Your Old Lady." Lindley's voice is high-pitched, a little plaintive and relentlessly on-key — he's a subtle, unobtrusive and very effective vocalist. There's no doubt why Jackson Browne often called on Lindley for vocal backups in his early concerts, before enlisting such accompaniment as David Crosby and Rosemary Butler.

Lindley is much more than just a technical wonder-boy on guitar — he's got a deep, dramatic sense to his music. His trademark lap slide guitar can sound alternately vicious and morose; it can wail high like a siren and boom low with an instant. In "Your Old Lady," Lindley opened with a low string lead, a moaning, mechanized roar. "Your old lady," he sang with an eerie intensity. "Sure looks good to me. Your lady sure looks good to me." When the song broke into chorus, Lindley evoked the sexual innuendo with a blazing high string lead that threatened to break out of control with each note. "Your lady is my old lady too," he concluded, returning to the brooding, hydraulic howl of the lower strings. Lindley is proficient enough on his instruments to change his pacing, pitch and style to suit the implications of the lyric — he doesn't bowl through them with stock riffs.

Lindley took his band to San Diego for one show, came north to the Bear for one show, skipped Los Angeles, and is now making last minute preparations for the Joe Walsh tour. The magic of the Huntington Beach performance may not be repeated for some months, but the essence of the show is captured in slightly slicker studio cuts on "El Rayo-X" (the phrase, Spanish for the X-ray, began mysteriously turning up on Lindley's equipment, so he adopted it for the album name). Don't be put off by the garish cover of the album, the music inside is both inspired and inspiring to hear.

Casting board

Kate Jackson will star with operatic superstar Luciano Pavarotti in MGM's musical comedy "Yes, Giorgio."

Franklin J. Schaffner will direct from an original screenplay by Norman Steinberg.

Miss Jackson, formerly of "Charlie's Angels," will play an American physician pitted against her reluctant patient, an Italian opera star, in a cultural clash that sparks romance.

Bo Derek will star in "Mistress of the Seas," a pirate adventure to be written and directed by John Derek.

The story will be loosely based on a legendary woman pirate and will be in the tradition of the Douglas Fairbanks-Errol Flynn swashbucklers.

Richard Marquand has been signed for "Revenge of the Jedi," the next chapter in the "Star Wars" saga. The movie, third in the series, will be filmed in England and on location.

'Animal' defends photographer role

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES — Daryl Anderson says he thinks newspaper photographers complained about the character he portrays on "Lou Grant" (tonight at 10 o'clock on Channel 2) for the wrong reasons.

In the early days of the CBS series, Animal, a photographer for a Los Angeles newspaper, looked like a candidate for a rescue mission.

He had a three-day growth of beard, a far-away look in his eyes (perhaps put there by a controlled substance) and clothes that looked like he got them at that mission.

Things have changed. Animal now has a beard rather than stubble, has sworn off the weed, and dresses more respectably. Not that he's gone Establishment, but Lou and Billie and Joe may have to start calling him Dennis Price instead.

"I'm really surprised that all the criticism has been about his appearance," said Anderson, "and not about the fact that he is portrayed as a reporter's assistant. That he just tags along. Although once I did tell Billie that I was there because pictures sell papers."

"But he doesn't often get to be on his own, the way many newspaper photographers work."

About once a year, Anderson has a show of his own in which Animal does get to work independently. Last year, he helped unravel an old Hollywood scandal and this year he dug in to the past of a young woman who committed suicide. He fell in love with his image of her.

Anderson, an amateur photographer, was ready with his camera for real not long ago when a building caught fire near a location film site. He began snapping away with Animal's camera.

His photographs were distributed to newspapers by The Associated Press and later reprinted in American Photographer magazine.

He said he plans to take a lot of pictures this spring on his trip to Germany. He and a group of actors will be guests of the East German government.

Anderson was born 29 years ago in Seattle and studied acting at the University of Washington and the Seattle Repertory Theater. Two weeks after graduation from college, he landed his first role in the movie "Sweet Revenge." It was while playing a part at the Los Angeles Actors Theater that he was invited to read for the role of Animal.

"When I showed up for the audition, I had a three-day growth of beard," he said. "I'd gotten a description of the character and grew the stubble for the reading. The casting director was familiar with my stage work. So on the basis of that and looking the part I got a reading."

It was his first television role. He later had a small part as a guard in the movie "Butch and Sundance: The Early Years." His first television film was "The Phoenix," which was broadcast by ABC about a month ago. He played a scientist who gets a sarcophagus out of a South American country only to find that the mummy inside is very much alive — and has superhuman powers. The plot is loosely based on the "ancient astronaut" theory.

Grant announced for cultural TV

By TOM JORY
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — It's been nearly six months since public TV's "Grand Alliance" pay network was proposed, and there's been some movement recently that has the project's creators encouraged.

"I don't want to be premature — we're still in the exploratory stage," says Lawrence K. Grossman, president of the Public Broadcasting Service and the guiding force behind the so-called Public Subscriber Network, "but I think we have good reason to be optimistic."

The Mobil Corp., an important underwriter of continuing public TV series like "Masterpiece Theater" and "Mystery," announced several days ago a grant of $125,000 to PBS for development of the proposed cultural and educational TV service. Mobil offered an additional $125,000, pending the outcome of a feasibility study for the PSN.

The Mobil grant is the second awarded the project. The Carnegie Corp. last month provided $225,000 for development of the network.

The Public Subscriber Network would begin programming in 1983. An extensive research effort is under way to determine the extent of viewer interest in programs of this type proposed for PSN, and major artistic and educational institutions are being approached as potential allies with public TV in the network.

Grossman will report on the progress toward a Public Subscriber Network at PBS' annual membership meeting in Cincinnati, June 29-30.

PBS was not the first of the major networks to turn an eye toward non-broadcast television, and in fact, a good deal has happened since Grossman unveiled the Public Subscriber Network plan in mid-January.

ABC's Alpha Repertory Program Service — ARTS — beamed its first program to cable subscribers in April, and CBS Cable announced not long ago its own cultural program service will premiere Oct. 12.

Dream of Kansas hospital turns into nightmare

COLBY, Kan. (AP) — It started out innocently enough. Back in 1975, civic leaders decided Thomas County needed a new hospital and set the wheels of bureaucracy in motion to build one.

Six years later, that dream, common in small, rural communities dependent on home-grown health care, has turned into a convoluted nightmare of blockades, belligerence and bad blood between father and son, neighbor and neighbor, and businessman and customer.

One side of the bloodless but bitter civil war envisions a gleaming new medical center that will offer the best general health care money can buy, keep the county's precious doctors at home, and pay for itself by attracting local residents who travel far afield out of distrust for the present antiquated facility.

The other side is unshakable in its disbelief that a modern facility can support itself. Opponents believe the old hospital is structurally superior to anything that can be built today and only needs remodeling. They fear a new structure will be turned over to the county to operate, resulting in rising taxes and increased medical costs.

The original plan to replace the four-story, 43-year-old Thomas County Hospital with a modern one-story structure supported by public funds has been scrapped. Now on the blueprints is a private, non-profit medical center financed by donation and industrial revenue bonds, which don't come from taxes.

The new hospital has spawned a dozen lawsuits, triggered two Kansas Supreme Court decisions, generated five bills in the Legislature, appeared on the local ballot three times, turned the hospital board membership into a game of musical chairs, and resulted in the recall of two county commissioners and the resignation of a third.

The Kansas attorney general's office has filed a civil lawsuit alleging that the three former commissioners and six former hospital board trustees violated the state's open meeting law between November 1979 and March 1980. The defendants, all opposed to the new hospital, have denied the charge.

That case comes to trial this month. Meanwhile, a steel skeleton is rising on a sloping hill south of this county seat in western Kansas. Slated to open in February 1982, it will cost $5.6 million.

It's hard to find anyone in this agricultural county of 8,500 who is neutral on the hospital issue.

"It's become an obsession with people," says Steve Frazier, a new hospital proponent who has lived in Colby six years as district manager of a seed company's research department.

Steel skeleton rising behind Jim Tubbs near Colby, Kan., is controversial new hospital

"People who've been friends for years aren't speaking to one another. Farmers have put this issue before tending their crops. It's really made everybody paranoid."

Lloyd Theimer is a third-generation Thomas County farmer, a former hospital board member who is a defendant in the attorney general's suit, and the primary leader of the opposition.

"I blame ambitious doctors who decided they wanted a new red wagon" for spearheading the move to build the new hospital, says Theimer. "The present building is a much finer structure. A new hospital will raise our insurance rates, there's no way it can support itself, and in a few years the county will have to take it over. Tax-wise, that will murder us."

Theimer says the hospital issue has created such a chasm in the community "that for all practical purposes, it has destroyed the compatibility of this generation in the county."

"I don't talk to my cousin anymore and he doesn't talk to me, and he doesn't talk to his father and his father doesn't talk to him," adds Theimer, 58.

Thomas County's civil war is hard for outsiders to fathom. Its roots are twined in local politics, power struggles, fear of higher taxes, resistance to change, and stubborn, cantankerous egos.

Theimer blames it on "some families who got off on the wrong foot when the county was founded a hundred years ago, and never got straight with the world."

Pro-hospital leader Jim Tubbs, a local car dealer, says the opposition "is a bunch of people who are against anything and the old hospital's seven doctors and 106 employees.

At countless public hearings, which often generated into shouting and shouting matches, the physicians lobbied en masse for a modern structure on grounds the old one was outmoded and unsafe.

"The St. Thomas Hospital is below modern standards in so many areas it's difficult to know

"I don't talk to my cousin anymore and he doesn't talk to me. . ."

new, totally resistant to any change."

"But it's not an urban-rural, or a rich-poor, or a young-old issue," says Don Crumbaker, a Republican 11-year veteran of the Kansas House of Representatives. "I've lived there since 1947 and I've never seen anything as divisive as this hospital issue. It crept up on us all."

"It started out as a fight because one side thought it would cost tax money. Now no taxes are involved, but it has generated such bitterness nobody will back down."

Allied in favor of the new facility are Thomas County's newspaper, two banks, most of the merchants and churches, civic groups, the City Council, where to begin listing them." Dr. Floyd Smith told one meeting in 1979. "In addition to hindering physicians' ability to practice their skills on behalf of their patients, it is a major roadblock to attracting new physicians to our area."

Emergency and X-ray services are on the first floor, but surgery is on the fourth, and doctors claim the hospital's only elevator frequently breaks down. Oxygen cables and television and electrical wiring are side-by-side in the old walls. The staff claims the facility is sweltering in summer and cold in the winter, a detriment to all patients and a major hazard to newborns.

But Theimer and other opponents say many defects can be corrected through a multimillion-dollar remodeling job. They cite the soundness of the brick structure by its designation as the only Civil Defense building in Colby.

The old hospital was built in 1938 with Works Progress Administration assistance and a $15,000 general obligation bond. Records indicate that was the only local public money ever spent on the facility.

The Sisters of St. Agnes ran the hospital until 1973 on donations and revenue accrued by the nuns. When they turned the structure over to the county eight years ago for $100,000, it had a $1.3 million depreciated value and cash and certificates of deposit totaling $387,000.

Two years later a feasibility study indicated the need for a new hospital, so in November 1976 the county held a bond election. Ninety-three percent of the county's registered voters turned out in a blizzard to ballot 3-to-1 to spend $3.6 million for a new 61-bed facility.

In January 1977, opponents filed suit to block the bonds on grounds that the law under which they were being issued did not apply to Thomas County hospitals.

The Kansas Supreme Court ruled in their favor, and placed the new hospital's proponents squarely in front of their first brick wall. But in the ensuing years they proved remarkably adept at clambering over or tunneling under such obstacles.

Despite another Supreme Court ruling that went against them, the proponents appear to be winning the long, drawn-out conflict.

Crumbaker, with the help of the area's state senator, Democrat Richard Gannon, went to the Legislature five times for help and got it from bemused lawmakers who were awfully glad the bitter fight wasn't in their constituency.

Last November, Crumbaker was re-elected to another two-year term by more than a 2-to-1 margin — "about the same percentage breakdown as the vote on the hospital issue," he says.

Advocates of the new medical center formed the non-profit Thomas County Hospital Association and vow to raise all the needed money through private donations. The total of $1.6 million is climbing each day.

Proponents held bake sales, car washes, covered-dish suppers and rummage sales to get the fund drive off the ground. Among them, the seven doctors pledged $125,000, and the 15 trustees of the non-profit association pledged $135,700. With the extraordinary outpouring of help from people like John Kriss, a local farmer who walked into the group's small storefront office one day with a check for $125,000, the association soon surpassed its initial goal of $1 million.

"I guess we just got mad," says Larry Barrett, the local savings and loan president many citizens call the "father of the new hospital." "It looked like a small group of people were trying to stop democracy from working. The majority wasn't going to stand for that."

A St. Louis firm is building the facility on donated land, and the association has contracted with a Denver hospital to manage it. A countywide contest to name the hospital was won by a 9-year-old boy, who dubbed it Citizens Medical Center.

Most of the suits, counter-suits and legal challenges have been settled. In April voters decided 1,858 to 1,196 to close the old facility and transfer its assets to the new one.

The only court fight still on Colby's flat horizon is the June trial of the attorney general's suit. If it isn't settled out of court beforehand, both sides predict a massive turnout for the four-day session.

But when and if the Citizens Medical Center finally opens its doors, local residents worry the facility will never be able to heal the wounds caused by its creation. The only thing both sides seem to agree on is: "We certainly hope so."

Railroad buff engineering restoration effort

CARSON CITY, Nev. (AP) — In its heyday a century ago, the Virginia and Truckee Railroad spilled out of the dusty brown hills of Virginia City bearing silver ore from the Comstock lode.

Famed and prosperous, the little shortline steam train carried its precious cargo 13 miles — and 1,575 downhill feet — to stamp mills along the Carson River for refining. It also carried miners, bankers, entertainers and statesmen in richly appointed coaches crafted out of hardwood and brass.

It sits today — what's left of it — in a huge metal warehouse just south of Carson City. Its cars are mostly broken down and weather-beaten, if they've been lucky. If they haven't, they're charred, twisted skeletons bearing few clues to their vibrant past.

Richard Datin would change all that — given enough money. Once a model builder who designed and constructed the spaceship "Enterprise" of Star Trek fame, Datin is curator of the Virginia and Truckee Railroad Collection. His job is to bring the V&T back to some semblance of life.

So far, his success has been modest. Only one piece of equipment — Locomotive No. 25 — has been fully restored. The rest — some two dozen — stand in various states of neglect, either in neat rows across the warehouse or in a jangle of rust behind it.

Nonetheless, on May 31, the V&T museum will open its second year of operation, and Datin is radiant at the prospect.

He remembers Oct. 13 of last year — the date the No. 25 was fired up for the first time in 25 years. That event will be re-created on the museum's opening and closing dates this year — and, Datin hopes, for years to come.

"It was just a great day," he said. "It was a great feeling to have that thing running again. The people just went bananas. It was the first time in 30 years a steam whistle had been heard in Carson City."

The sound of steam was common enough in Nevada's capital in the latter years of the 19th century. In 1870, for instance, the V&T ran seven round trips daily between Carson City and Virginia City. At various times, it also ran north to Reno and south to the rich agricultural center of Minden.

In the 1870s, Virginia City was a boomtown exploding with the exuberance of the richest silver strike in history. It was both mild and civilized, sophisticated and barbaric, with fine restaurants and an opera house alongside dancehalls and bawdy houses. It featured a 24-hour population of some of the shrewdest businessmen and unsavory roustabouts the West had ever seen.

All that died as the Comstock's silver vein shriveled away. In time, the V&T ran only between Carson City and Minden, and then, in 1950, not at all.

But its rolling stock was saved, unlike most shortline railroads. It was a story straight out of Hollywood.

Hollywood is where the V&T ended up, with much of its stock sold off car by car to major film studios and used over again in movies such as "Union Pacific" and dozens of others. Anyone who has seen an American-made film featuring steam trains has probably seen the V&T.

The equipment was sold to the studios during the 1930s, 40s and 50s "for peanuts," as Datin put it — and sold back to the state in the 1970s. In between, the V&T cars underwent major "cosmetic" changes as they were adapted to portray a variety of different trains.

The result is that a number of the cars owned by the state are structurally sound but historically inaccurate. Much of the renovation work on the studio trains consists of stripping off layers of paint, removing anachronistic embellishments and refitting the cars with the equipment of their proper era.

The potential payoffs are obvious. To enter a Virginia and Truckee coach is to catch a glimpse of a world long gone — to run a hand over red velvet upholstery or hand-carved wooden trim, to gaze up at a ceiling covered with intricate hand-painted designs.

A spot in the center of the passenger cars was reserved for a chandelier. Those are all gone.

But soft light still filters through delicate wooden blinds, etched glass windows flanked by solid brass gas lamps still line the top of the mahogany wall, and it's still possible for a visitor to sense the pride of workmanship and richness of materials that went into the V&T coaches.

Datin said it may cost $100,000 or more to fully restore a locomotive, somewhat less for a passenger car. The museum is slated to receive about $40,000 a year from the state for the next two years — in addition to private donations.

So plans don't call for all the pieces to be restored. Rather, visitors will see cars in all states of repair and, for the next few years at least, may have an opportunity to actually watch the restoration work.

Last year, the V&T museum had 5,996 registered visitors and expects more this year. Datin said the opening of the California railroad museum in Sacramento should help attendance by drawing rail buffs to the area.

Datin describes himself as a rail buff — one drawn to his position with the state Department of Museums and History by nothing more than the Virginia and Truckee.

"You sort of pick a railroad — your favorite one," said Datin, standing amid the litter of ancient rusty objects destined for new life. "That's where I am."

Presbyterians seeking reunion

HOUSTON (AP) — The same old variations in customs that kept Northern and Southern Presbyterians apart back in the horse-and-buggy days still separate them today, but there's new hope for bridging the gaps.

The changed outlook was traced at a joint session of the two groups, meeting here concurrently for week-long governing assemblies.

Nearly a century ago, in 1884, an attempt to unify the groups bogged down over differences about relations to civil government, property matters, black congregations and women's roles.

These were cited as still key problems in a current drive to merge the North-South bodies, which split during the Civil War and have been trying periodically since to reunite.

"None of the objections to reunion are new," the Rev. J. Randolph Taylor of Charlotte, N.C., said to the joint session.

Taylor, of the Presbyterian Church U.S. (Southern), and the Rev. Robert C. Lamar of the United Presbyterian Church — the co-chairmen of the reunion committee — outlined specific ways over the hurdles.

Lamar of Albany, N.Y., said no basic matters of doctrine divide the denominations.

"We are not two different kinds of Presbyterians. We are 'family' in a unique way,

We have affirmed the same faith, exercised the same polity and borne the same witness here in this land and throughout the world."

Said Taylor, "There always is risk, but the time is now."

Referring to the contrasts in size of the two denominations — 2.4 million in the Northern church, 900,000 in the Southern body — Taylor said, "If you're thinking of swallowing us, you must prepare yourself for an enormous stomach ache."

Measures also were outlined for assuring black churches adequate representation in a reunited church, since both denominations now stress racial equality.

JUST COASTING

Wrath sweeps inland

CRYING FOUL & SUCH: Sometimes you may get the notion that the only voices of indignation and outrage over action of our wonderful state Coastal Commission are raised by residents of this best of all possible coasts. Not quite true, maybe. Oh, it is true that perhaps the loudest cries of foul come from the coastline as the Coastal Commission's social tinkers and bureaucratic functionaries pontificate on some of their more arbitrary and capricious dicta.

ONCE, FOR EXAMPLE, the coastal czars, in their infinite wisdom, granted a Newport Beach bank the right to build only after bank officials agreed to buy a small bus to transport visitors from its parking lot to the beach.

Another hotel upcoast got a permit to add rooms only after the commission ruled a certain number of rooms must be held open for less affluent beach visitors.

One notion of how cut-rate rooms would be allocated to the poor was by the zip code of their neighborhood. One of the zip codes thus anointed just happened to include the University of Southern California campus. Such weekend cut-rate fun.

THE EVER-BENEVOLENT commission was also poised to demand that some Malibu residents grant beach easements across their property after their homes burned down. In South Laguna, an easement was demanded through a residential carport parking area.

Indeed, the list seems endless. But again, most of the cries of foul and protests of private property confiscation have come from coastal people. And why not? You don't get too much demand for beach easements in Brea or La Habra.

TOM MURPHINE

La Habra welcoming committee for the coastal czars

BUT WAIT! We have another recent bit of Coastal Commission wonderfulness wherein the Lutheran Church of Half Moon Bay, upcoast in San Mateo County, has been blocked from building a new sanctuary.

Some coastal commission savants apparently believe the new church might block a small patch of ocean view from the coast highway.

The Lutherans, who have been attempting to build on the property they've owned since 1979, insist that any possible view of significance has already been blocked by other structures.

It sounds like an old, old story around these parts.

Yet, from where does a strong voice of protest come? Why from the newspaper in Brea and La Habra, in our own inland Orange County.

Thus did the Daily Star Progress, serving those two communities fume, "Up until recently, there has been no agency of government, local, state or federal, that has dared tell Americans where they could or could not build a church.

"IF AGENCIES LIKE the Coastal Commission aren't abolished and legislators who promote such heinous agencies aren't defeated, we can all kiss our religious liberties goodbye.

"Agencies like the Coastal Commission collect the totalitarian mentality to work within its structure, like a dung heap collects flies.

"The stench of its most recent action should appall every Christian in America as well as every civilized person who believes in the sanctity of our Constitutional rights."

MY GOODNESS! Rather strong words heaped on the coastal commission brass from a place not even touched by the waters of the Pacific. The commission's popularity appears to be sweeping inland.

Or maybe the tide just came in.

PRISON AID — Chief Justice Warren Burger says that, despite a tight federal budget, the nation should establish an academy for prison guards and provide mandatory educational and vocational programs for inmates.

Veterans probing pesticide

RUTLAND, Vt. (AP) — In a move they are calling "Operation Peace of Mind," some local Vietnam veterans are programming a computer to determine the chances that they and other vets were exposed to the herbicide Agent Orange.

The program being put together by the Rutland chapter of the Vietnam Veterans of America also should be able to determine whether veterans were in the paths of two other herbicides used by the U.S. Army, Agent White and Agent Blue.

Dropping of state no excuse

DENVER (AP) — A judge here has ruled that drunken-driving charges no longer will be dismissed simply because the court summons fails to include the word "Colorado" next to the word "Denver."

In her ruling, U.S. District Judge Susan Barnes was responding to a case earlier this year when a Denver county judge dismissed a drunken-driving charge against Marilyn Northcutt on that technicality.

Farmers to help needy

GLASGOW, Scotland (AP) — The head of Britain's National Farmers' Union has said it is time to devote more attention to the underprivileged of the world.

"It is time we looked more closely at ways in which we can help feed those who are in a worse position," Richard Butler told a convention of agricultural writers.

"In the long term, ways of increasing the efficiency of agriculture all over the globe, by advice and help, will provide a lasting answer."

Most blacks in South

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite decades of migration to the North and West, more than half of America's blacks still live in the South, the Census Bureau has reported.

In a study released recently, the bureau said 53 percent of black Americans were in the South. It added that during the 1970s about as many blacks moved to the South as left the region. New York had at least 2,401,842 black residents, the most in the nation. California was second, with 1,819,220 and Texas third with 1,710,250.

Daughter is obstinate

She refuses mother's plea to visit crippled father

DEAR ANN LANDERS: My husband recently had a severe stroke. He is paralyzed on his right side. His speech is slurred but comprehensible.

Our happily married daughter has two children and lives in Baltimore. I have pleaded with her to come and see her father, but she refuses. She says she can't face the fact that he is crippled and will never be the same daddy she used to know. Her dread is understandable, but her obstinance is killing me.

I offered to pay her plane fare (we live in California and it is an expensive trip), but it didn't change her mind. I know she really loves her father, and he is crazy about her.

Please tell me if I should stop begging her to make the trip. Also, is she wrong for refusing to come? I will be watching and waiting for your answer. — HEARTBROKEN MOTHER

Dear Mother: This isn't a matter of "right" or "wrong." It's a matter of emotional maturity.

I hope your daughter gets some counseling immediately. She needs to become adult enough to accept her handicapped father as he is. If she is unable to deal with this situation during his lifetime, she will carry a load of guilt to her grave.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I have you to thank for helping make my life miserable. My husband and I are getting on in years. We both read your column, and once or twice you have said, "If you don't use it, you'll lose it."

Well, my husband thinks you are talking directly to him. Even though he is less and less able to perform sexually (in fact, he is darn near impotent), sex is all he thinks about. I really do enjoy it now and then (once a month is okay), but I could live without it, too.

I do everything I can think of to discourage him. At bedtime I find things to do, such as washing clothes, cleaning closets, or mopping the floors. Usually he falls asleep. But if he wakes up in the middle of the night, he won't leave me alone until we start something. More often than not, he folds up and can't finish. Any advice? — TIED AFTER 40 YEARS

Dear Tied: Sounds like a ma-and-pa laundry... you are spending your evening hours at the tub and he's folding.

The challenge is to bring some starch to the scene. Your sad-in-the-sack husband should see the family doctor. There are ways to fortify the body to match a willing spirit.

It's more than likely that bedtime would be a less dread time if you didn't wear yourself out with all those domestic chores. (What do you do during the day?) A well-rested and eager partner could be a partial solution to the problem.

And since your husband lives by mottoes, he should try this one for size: "Don't abuse it... just renew it."

DEAR ANN LANDERS: My sister-in-law has a parrot that talks a blue streak. She swears "Clattertrap" knows what he is saying because he responds to questions and calls people by name. I say this is not possible. Please settle it once and for all. — SAN JUAN

Dear San: Talking birds are imitators. There is no creative thinking going on in their feathered heads.

Sagittarius: Be 'selfish'

Tuesday, June 2, 1981

By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Relative makes proposal for new project. Be open-minded, not gullible. Emphasis on independence, originality and stimulation provided by romantic interlude. Focus also on trips, correspondence, special reports.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Evaluation of assets shows you are in better financial position than originally anticipated. Protect valuables, improve security measures. Hunch pays dividends. You recoup loss and regain sense of direction.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Popularity is on upswing; judgment, intuition and timing hit mark. Another Gemini and a Sagittarian play important roles. Accept invitation to social event. You are due to meet people who aid your cause.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Face truth as it exists, not merely as you wish it might be. You encounter individual who aids in rebuilding structure which had "decayed" as result of neglect. Aquarius, Scorpio, Leo natives figure prominently.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Ability to be analytical surges to forefront. Don't be satisfied to know something merely happened — find reasons, detect motives. Member of opposite sex figures prominently. Additional funds will be made available for business or career project.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Differentiate between false and sincere flattery. Surprise gift could be on agenda. Emphasis also on home, family and important domestic adjustment. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio natives play significant roles. Turn on charm.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Long-distance call creates aura of excitement. Accent on communication, education, publication and acute perceptiveness. Define meanings, see places and people as they are, not merely as you wish they might exist. Watch Pisces!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Emphasis on money, investments, financial security and credit ratings. Cancer, Pisces and another Scorpio figure prominently. Older individual becomes valuable ally. Timing is essential to progress. Check with Capricorn!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You strike chord of universal appeal. People are drawn to you with their problems. Don't neglect your own needs — it is time to be "creatively selfish." Aries, Leo, Libra natives play important roles. Finish!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Let go of "technique" which creates friction, delay and ultimate loss. Strive for fresh procedures, encourage new contacts and renovate personal surroundings. You'll gain greater degree of independence. Watch Leo!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Good lunar aspect coincides with romance, creativity, special relationships with children and speculative ventures. In games of chance, stick with the numbers 2, 11 and 20. Another Aquarian plays significant role.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Focus on important details, correction of past errors and willingness to review and revise material. Improve security measures. Remove safety hazards from home. Make intelligent concession to older family member.

Captured by convict, they think it's funny

ZEBULON, Ga. (AP) — Being victimized isn't always a frightening experience, claims Doug Williams, who says being tied hand and foot by an armed, escaped convict was a "pretty laughable situation."

The convict allegedly left Williams, his wife, Connie, and four other hostages tied to an overhead beam in a house Williams was remodeling. They started freeing themselves before the gunman even left.

"The whole thing was silly. I just wish we could have gotten a picture of the six of us in here tied up," Williams said. "It would have made a great little keepsake.

"It was crazy. By the time he had gotten started tying the third one, the first two of us had worked our hands free. He didn't notice though," Williams said. "It took an hour and a half to tie us all up. We were beginning to think he was never going to leave."

Billy G. Waters, 51, of suburban Atlanta, allegedly grabbed the gun of Columbus Correctional Institution guard James Holmes recently while Waters and three other inmates were working outside the prison grounds in Columbus, said state prisons spokeswoman Sara Engle.

Waters, serving 12 years for voluntary manslaughter, allegedly forced his three fellow inmates and the guard into a county truck and drove about 50 miles, where they abandoned the vehicle and marched through the woods until they got to Williams' house two days later authorities said.

When Williams and his wife came home, the gunman and the others were waiting.

"I walked in the front door and there was Mr. Waters, standing at the base of the stairs with pistol pointed at me. It was like scenes from a silly movie," Williams said in an interview with The Columbus Enquirer.

Fatalities rise

CHICAGO (AP) — About 8,200 people died in accidents in the United States in January, up 4 percent from the 7,900 recorded in January 1980, according to figures released by the National Safety Council.

According to council president Vincent L. Tofany, 3,830 died in motor-vehicle accidents, 1,300 in public accidents, 2,300 in home accidents, and 1,200 in workplace accidents. Because some deaths are recorded in several categories, Tofany said the four classes add up to more than the 8,200 total deaths.

Construction fair set

The Orange County Chapter of The National Association of Women in Construction will sponsor its annual Dream Home Contest Friday through Sunday. The location is the Huntington Center, Beach Boulevard and Edinger Avenue, Huntington Beach.

The participants in the Dream Home Contest are local junior high school students who compete for awards with their own architectural plans and scale models of their "dream home."

This course on Construction Technology is offered within the school districts as an elective to seventh and eighth graders. Judging of the models will occur Friday and awards will be presented at noon Saturday.

In conjunction with the Dream Home Contest will be a "Construction Opportunity Fair". Representatives of the various construction trades and unions will be present with literature, slides, and answers to employment questions and opportunities in this field.

Mauch's Angels still struggling

Beniquez on tear to gain split

CHICAGO (AP) — Relief ace Lamarr Hoyt hadn't given any thought to the possibility that the Chicago White Sox were in danger of losing a double-header Sunday.

They had dropped the first game, 7-4, to the Angels, and the score was tied 1-1 in the ninth inning of the second game when Rod Carew broke an 0-for-14 slump with a double and went to third on Rick Burleson's sacrifice and a fielder's choice.

WITH RUNNERS on first and third and no outs, Hoyt was summoned to relieve Britt Burns. He got Dan Ford on a shallow fly to left, fanned Don Baylor and retired Brian Downing on a fly to center.

Carlton Fisk then doubled in the winning run in the bottom of the 10th to give the White Sox a 2-1 victory.

"When you come in in a spot like that," said Hoyt, who boosted his record to 4-1, "all you think about is keeping the ball around the infield, on the ground or in the air."

"I guess that's about the toughest situation I've been in this year," he said. "But once I got them out, I was sure we'd win the game."

Mike Squires opened the 10th by drawing a walk off Don Aase, 1-1, who also had worked two innings in the first game. Fisk attempted to bunt on the first pitch, but it was a ball — high and inside.

Manager Tony LaRussa took the bunt sign off, put on the hit-and-run and Fisk smashed a double past third, sending Squires home with the winning run.

"ONCE THE FIRST pitch was a ball, we decided to go to the hit-and-run because I had a man at the plate who can get the bat on the ball and is strong," said LaRussa. "If he hits it on the ground, it's like a bunt because the man will be on second," said LaRussa. "If he singles, we've got men on first and third, and if he happens to get a double, we win the game. I like those odds."

Juan Beniquez, filling in for the injured Fred Lynn, was the Angels' hero in the opener. He rapped three hits, including a double and two singles, and drove in four runs to make a winner of Mike Witt, 4-4.

Gene Mauch, gaining his first managerial victory with the Angels, yanked Witt after seven innings in which he allowed only four hits including a home run to Jim Morrison.

"He was struggling and stumbling from the fifth inning on," said Mauch. "But before that, I really liked his stuff. I think he's a big-leaguer. I don't know if he knows it, but it won't be long."

MAUCH SAID he didn't "want to stretch Aase" by using him twice in the same day. Aase came in to get the Angels out of a jam in the eighth inning of the nightcap when the White Sox threatened, and he also pitched out of trouble in the ninth before the Sox scored in the 10th.

"I hate double-headers," said Mauch. "They're worse than sin."

The split cost the White Sox their brief stay in first place in the American League West. Oakland climbed back on top with a victory over Toronto.

The Angels begin a three-game series with the Toronto Blue Jays tonight with Ken Forsch (6-3) facing Toronto's hard-throwing right-hander Dave Stieb (4-5).

Pitcher Dave Frost is due to make his first start of the season for the Angels Tuesday night. Frost, who has had back problems, was called up from Salt Lake City last week along with Fred Martinez.

It's now the 'House of Horrors' Rinaldi latest starlet

No manager is immune from Steinbrenner's spasmodic whims

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

The "House that Ruth Built" has become the "House of Horrors" for baseball managers.

Yankee Stadium is now the place where not elephants but field tacticians come to die. Not physically, of course. They manage to carry on resolutely elsewhere, most of them — as note Billy Martin, Bill Virdon and Ralph Houk.

But the big Bronx ball yard remains a cavern of indignity and shattered spirit for any manager who dares chance it — and there have been seven, counting the feisty Martin twice — in the eight years that George M. Steinbrenner has been boss.

THE LATEST to be thrust onto the sizzling griddle is Gene "Stick" Michael, a bright young man carefully hand-fashioned for the job by the big man himself.

Michael discovered last week that no one is immune from the spasmodic whims of the man in the suite upstairs. He came within a whisker of being dumped, less than two months into the season, simply because the Yankees lost important series to Cleveland and Baltimore.

It was a mad charade.

It is hard to believe that this is what Steinbrenner intended when he decided Jan. 3, 1973 to head a group buying the Yankees from CBS. The once proud team of Babe Ruth, Joe DiMaggio and Mickey Mantle had fallen into the doldrums.

Steinbrenner, a wealthy shipbuilder with a college coaching background, had an obsession for the Yankees pinstripes which he linked in Americana with "Kate Smith and apple pie."

HE LOOSENED the purse strings and purchased quality players, some, such as Reggie Jackson and Catfish Hunter, costing millions. He turned a temporary sow's ear into a silk purse. Within three years he had a championship team, winner of three straight American League pennants and two World Series.

There was a new pulse beat in the Big Apple. Yankee spirit was alive again. Then the scenario became ludicrous.

COMMENTARY

High drama turned to comedy and boredom.

The Yankees, instead of filling their dignified royal role, became a source of ridicule. It started with the Steinbrenner-Billy Martin off-again, on-again shenanigans. Then Reggie Jackson became the target, with the same general reaction. A disgruntled castoff, Sparky Lyle, labelled the Yankee clubhouse the "Bronx Zoo."

THE RIDICULOUS hit a high note last week after the three-game wipeout in Baltimore. Steinbrenner openly criticized most of the members of the team and brought Michael into his line of fire, saying the rookie skipper was making some bad moves and hinting of "important changes."

A member of the Yankee brass put out a feeler for Gene Mauch, the Angels' player personnel director and a managerial genius Steinbrenner long has admired. The Angels swiftly named Mauch their manager to succeed Jim Fregosi.

Baseball critics openly said this quick move saved Michael's job. It was a shattering blow to Michael's morale. It had to unsettle the Yankees, who rallied to Michael's defense.

There was a quick effort to try to close the wounds — denials by both the Yankees and Angels, which were patently hollow — but it was too late. The damage was done.

MICHAEL'S CONFIDENCE and authority had been undermined.

There is an incongruity here. Steinbrenner admits that his hero is the late General Patton. Can anyone imagine Patton sending troops into battle while telling them their company commander is incompetent and he'd rather have another?

Houk was a natural for the Yankee job — a tough, tobacco-chewing war hero who played for the Yankees and then managed them to three straight pennants and two world championships in his first tour as manager. He failed to come near that record in his second tour, and was succeeded by Virdon, a bespectacled, scholarly type with a good baseball head. Virdon was too subdued for George, who brought in Martin, whose five years were marked by constant bickering, one resignation and one firing.

Then came fatherly Bob Lemon, who won it all in 1978, followed by Martin's return in 1979. Then there was the short-lived Dick Howser reign — one which saw the Yankees win the AL East only to be swept by Kansas City in league championships.

'Z Squad' zeroes in Valenzuela pitches tonight

LOS ANGELES (AP) — They call themselves the "Z Squad." They are Pepe Frias, Derrell Thomas, Rick Monday and the rest of the Los Angeles Dodgers not considered regulars.

"This was a big day for the Z Squad," Monday said after the Dodgers trampled Cincinnati 16-4 in Sunday's game.

"Derrell made a big play at second base and knocked in some runs, Pepe knocked in a couple and I was fortunate enough to hit one out," outfielder Monday said.

The victory, the Dodgers' second in the three-game series with Cincinnati, enabled them to open a 5½-game lead over the Reds in the National League West.

SUNDAY'S DODGER Stadium crowd of 46,411 pushed the home attendance over the one million mark to 1,026,725 on only the 22nd home date — the earliest any baseball team has reached that plateau. It also was the Dodgers' 10th straight sellout, and the 11th in a row is tonight when rookie Fernando Valenzuela starts against the Atlanta Braves.

"I'm certainly pleased we beat Cincinnati two out of three," said Los Angeles Manager Tom Lasorda, whose Dodgers have won five of seven this season from the Reds. "I'm especially pleased because of all the injuries we have."

The Dodgers were without three starters, second baseman Davey Lopes, shortstop Bill Russell and center fielder Ken Landreaux, yet still riddled four Reds pitchers for 18 hits.

And to add to the difficulty, Cincinnati had a 4-0 lead after two innings and Dodger starter Jerry Reuss was out of the game with a hamstring pull after facing just one batter.

But Los Angeles, which had not managed a hit off the Reds' Mario Soto the first two innings, erupted for seven runs in the third, their biggest inning of the season. They added three more runs in the fifth and made it a rout with six more in the seventh — two on Monday's homer.

"We got their pitcher out of there early and we gave our pitcher a four run lead," Cincinnati Manager John McNamara said. "You should win games like that. Walks and errors hurt us. The walk to Monday is what killed Soto. But, it counts as only one loss."

SHORTSTOP FRIAS started the big third inning with a bunt single. Rick Sutcliffe, who had taken over for Reuss, walked. Thomas, who had three singles, knocked in Frias with the first run and then Soto walked Monday to fill the bases.

Dusty Baker, who also had three hits, singled home two more runs. When Thomas slid into Mike O'Berry with the third run of the inning, Cincinnati lost the ball. In his haste he then threw wild to third and Monday and Baker also came home.

Steve Garvey, another with three hits, knocked out Soto with a single and Ron Cey greeted Paul Moskau with a double. Pedro Guerrero, who had two hits, singled Cey home.

Rinaldi latest starlet

PARIS (AP) — American tennis starlets get younger and younger.

The sensation of the French Open championships, Kathy Rinaldi, who has beaten two seeded players to reach the quarterfinals, is the youngest of them all — 14 years, 2 months. Nobody of that age has ever played in this prestigious event since it was thrown open to foreigners 56 years ago.

Tracy Austin was 14 years, 7 months when she burst into Wimbledon in 1977. A year later Pam Shriver, just 16, made the U.S. Open final. Last year Andrea Jaeger reached the Wimbledon quarterfinals just short of 15.

Now it's Kathy Rinaldi, a blonde schoolgirl from Jensen Beach, Fla. She has emerged as the biggest show stopper at the clay courts tournament in which quarterfinals begin Tuesday.

Kathy is the youngest Grand Slam tournament player in tennis history. Her second upset Sunday totally eclipsed the victories of such superstars as Sweden's Bjorn Borg and Americans John McEnroe and Chris Evert Lloyd.

Kathy, a dentist's daughter who has previously played in only six professional tournaments was trailing 1-3 in the third set against No. 11 seed Anne Smith of the United States before she took the next five games to win 6-1, 4-6, 6-3 and qualify for the quarterfinals.

Borg, favored to win the men's title for a record sixth time, easily moved into the quarterfinals with a near-perfect 6-0, 6-0, 6-1 victory over American Terry Moor.

Lloyd, chasing her fifth French Open title, also qualified for the quarterfinals with a straight set win, 6-3, 6-0, over Britain's Virginia Wade, the No. 16 seed.

Rinaldo next sees action against Hana Mandlikova in a match that will mark the toughest contest in her young life. Mandlikova is the fifth best palyer in the world.

The American teen-ager, who begins high school in September, is taking her success with a great deal of calm.

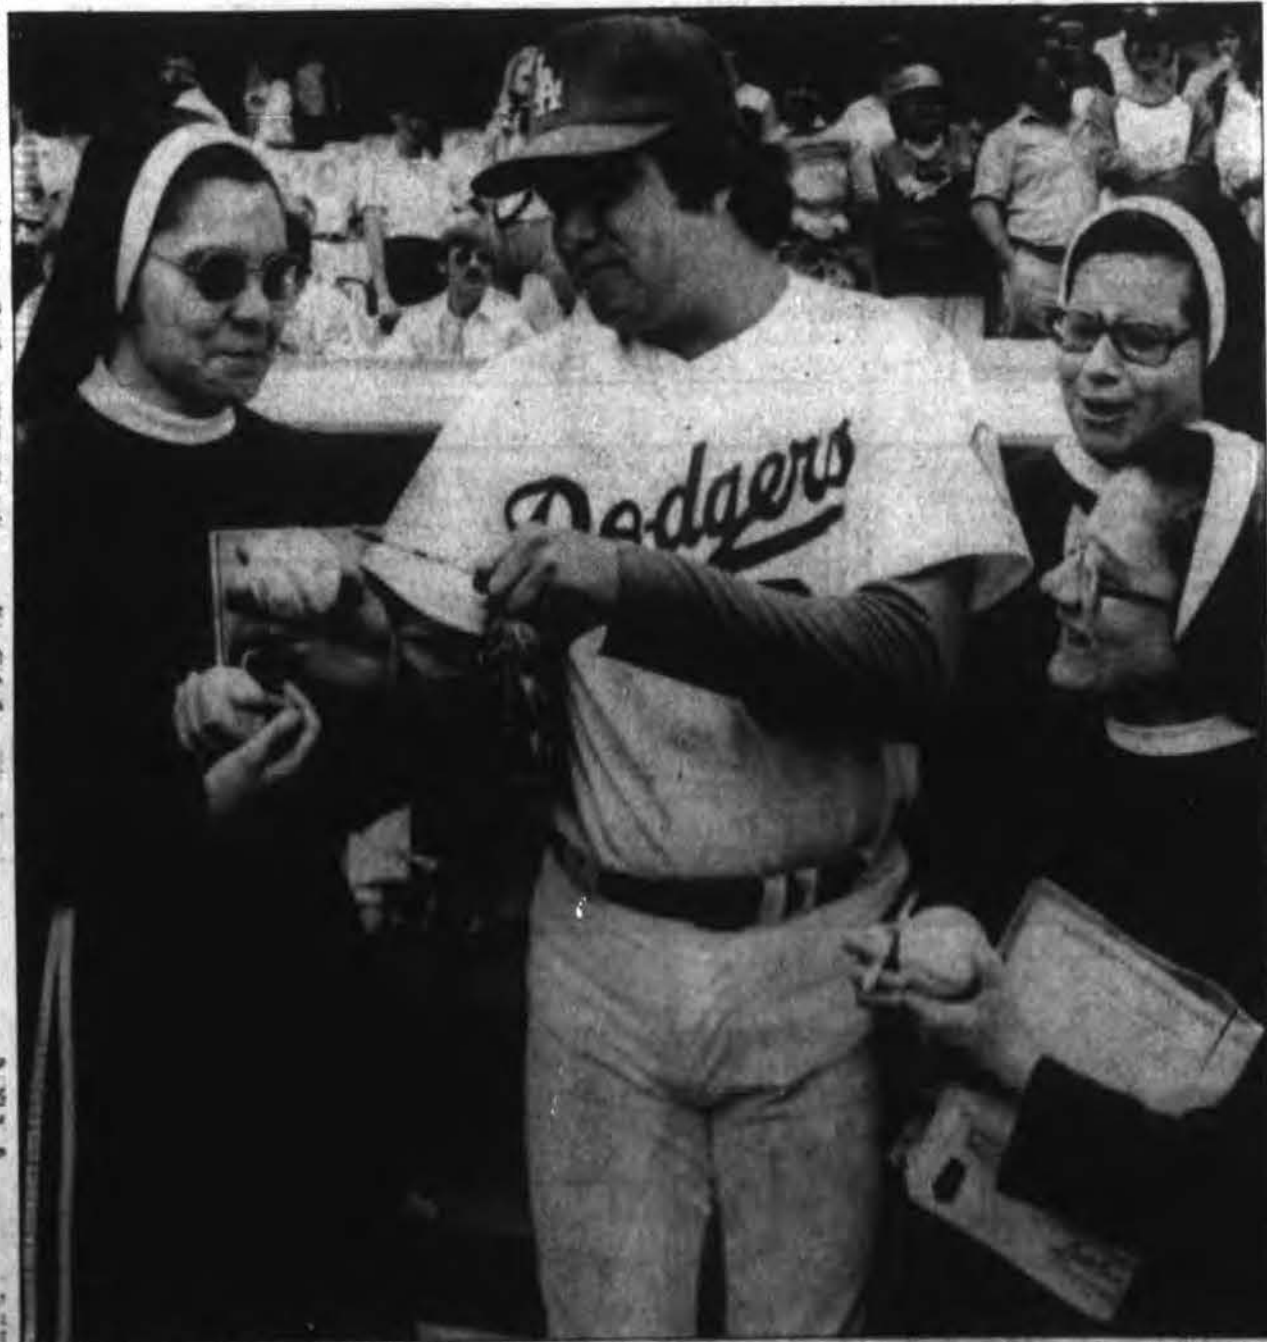

"I feel very relaxed," she said after her upset Sunday. "I don't have any pressure on me. I just go out there and play."

ROMINE, SODDERS EARN ALL-AMERICA

• Outfielder Kevin Romine and third baseman Mike Soddors of Arizona State, both ex-Orange Coast College standouts, were named to the American Association of College Baseball Coaches All-America team Sunday in Omaha, Nebraska, site of the College World Series.

Romine is also a graduate of Fountain Valley High and hit at a torrid .432 clip this season with 12 home runs and 56 RBI for the Sun Devils.

Soddors, a senior at Arizona State, hit .437 with 21 homers and 96 RBI.

Fernando Valenzuela warmed up for tonight's start by signing autographs Sunday.

From AP Dispatches
CHICAGO — Umpire Dale Ford was behind the plate in the second game of the Angels-Chicago White Sox double-header Sunday, after threatening to walk off the field if broadcaster Jimmy Piersall continued to harass the umpiring crew.

Piersall, a former player, was accused of making an obscene gesture with a finger to plate umpire Joe Brinkman from the broadcasting booth during the first game at Comiskey Park, but Piersall denied it.

"I went like this with my hands," said Piersall, indicating Brinkman had called a strike on a ball that was outside. "Then he started giving me the rolling hip motion, so I gave him the thumbs-up gesture, not the finger."

Ford at first used the word forfeit but then relented and said, "If he does it while I'm behind the plate, I'll walk off the field."

Quote of the day

"I'm two guys. I put on the uniform and I'm another person. I take it off and I'm someone else. I guess I'm just schizophrenic." — Otherwise mild-mannered Lenny Randle, explaining why he becomes one of baseball's more aggressive players when he slips into a Seattle Mariners uniform.

Fisk can't get 27, takes 72

BOSTON — Catcher Carlton Fisk wore No. 27 when he played for the Boston Red Sox and outfielder Fred Lynn sported No. 19 on his back. When they moved to other teams in the American League, each found his old number taken on his new club.

Fisk just turned his around. Carlton is wearing 72 for the Chicago White Sox. Lynn, who was traded to the Angels, took his old college number, the No. 16 he wore when playing for USC.

Carlton wins eighth with five-hitter

Unbeaten Steve Carlton posted his eighth victory with a five-hitter and batterymate Bob Boone contributed a key two-run single as Philadelphia beat St. Louis, 6-1, Sunday to take over first place in the National League East.

Gary Carter went 3-for-4 and drove in two runs to back the six-hit pitching of Steve Rogers as Montreal downed Pittsburgh, 5-1. Pittsburgh starter Pascual Perez retired 10 in a row before Chris Speier singled in the fifth.

Mike Sadek's fourth-inning double, the first solid San Francisco hit off Nolan Ryan, drove in two runs and propelled the Giants to a 6-1 win over Houston. Ryan allowed six walks and had three wild pitches in seven innings. He is now one walk short of Early Wynn's major league record of 1,774.

Luis Salazar stroked four hits and Broderick Perkins singled home Ozzie Smith twice to lead San Diego to a 5-1 win over Atlanta.

Dave Kingman slugged a solo homer and a run-scoring double to give Randy Jones his first victory of the season as the New York Mets defeated the Chicago Cubs, 3-2. Ellis Valentine, traded from Montreal to the New York Mets, says this will be a new start for him although he can't play until Friday because he is on the disabled list.

Meyer has four hits in Mariner win

Dan Meyer, a graduate of Mater Dei High School, rapped four hits and Joe Simpson knocked in three runs with three hits including his first home run of the season, to pace Seattle to a 5-3 win over the Texas Rangers Sunday in American League action.

Len Barker fired a six-hitter and Alan Bannister singled, doubled and homered to give Cleveland a 7-2 decision over the New York Yankees.

Danny Gooden's two-out single in the eighth inning scored Gary Ward from third base to give Minnesota a 5-4 win over Kansas City. A two-run double by Lynn Jones in the seventh inning, Detroit's sixth extra base hit of the game, lifted the Tigers to a 5-4 win over Baltimore.

Wayne Gross homered and drove in the winning run with a sacrifice fly in the ninth inning as Oakland rallied for two runs in the final frame to defeat Toronto, 6-5.

The win ended a four-game losing streak for the A's. Relief pitcher Bob Owchinko picked up the victory with three innings of no-hit ball.

Jim Gartner hit the game's second pitch for his first homer and Marshall Edwards drove in two runs with a double and a triple to lead Milwaukee to a 5-2 victory over Boston. Right-hander Pete Vuckovich allowed nine Red Sox hits in posting his sixth consecutive victory.

Baseball today

On this date in baseball in 1975: Nolan Ryan of the California Angels hurled the fourth no-hitter of his career, blanking the Baltimore Orioles, 1-0.

On this date in 1951: Cleveland fireballer Bob Feller turned in the third no-hitter of his career, beating the Detroit Tigers, 2-1.

Stadler wins Kemper by six strokes

Craig Stadler, who was runner-up here a year ago, fired a front-running, two-under-par 68 and scored an easy, six-stroke victory Sunday in the Kemper Open tournament at Bethesda, Md. It was the third title of his six-year PGA career and came with a 270 total, 10-strokes under par.

Cathy Reynolds captured the LPGA tournament at Greenwich, Conn. by two strokes for her first professional golf championship with a final-round par 72 for a 285 total. Australian Greg Norman fired a final-round par 67 to win the Dunlop Masters tournament by four strokes at Woburn, England. Fellow Australian Graham Marsh finished second.

Braxton stops Rossman on knockout

Dwight Braxton scored a seventh-round knockout over former WBC light heavyweight champion Mike Rossman in their scheduled 10-round bout Sunday in Atlantic City.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar of the Lakers and Elvin Hayes of the Washington Bullets were among 13 NBA players who arrived in Tokyo for a three-game exhibition series beginning Thursday. Canada's Gilles Villeneuve scored the first Grand Prix victory for the new turbo-charged Ferrari in a dramatic, accident-packed Monaco Grand Prix.

Brian Redman played a waiting game in the early going, then poured it on to pilot his powerful Lola to an easy victory in a GT sports car race at Lexington, Ohio.

Bashford wins Hobie-18 title

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Ian Bashford of Australia, with Steve Wheelan as crew, became the first world champion of the Hobie-18 Class in a three-race finale in moderate breezes.

Bashford scored 22½ points in the series of 37¼ for runner-up Phil Berman of Dana Point. Berman's crew was Tom Whitehurst of Florida.

Third place went to another California duo, Miles Wood and Don Manges of Oxnard.

The twin-hulled Hobie-18 was first introduced in late 1979. Since that time the fleet has grown rapidly, expanding into a worldwide organization. The "cat" was designed by Hobie Alter and Phil Edwards of Capistrano Beach, designers of the Hobie-14, Hobie-16 and other catamaran classes.

Hobie Alter Jr., another catamaran champion in the class, managed no better than seventh in the world title event.

Top 10 finishers: 1. Ian Bashford-Slave Wheelan, Australia, 22½ pts.; 2. Phil Berman-Tom Whitehurst, Dana Point, 37¼; 3. Miles Wood-Don Manges, Oxnard, 37½; 4. Dean Froome-John Driscoll, Kailua, Hawaii, 41½; 5. Bob Seaman-Dan Altman, Los Angeles, 48; 6. Brett Dryland-Tony Lawie, Australia, 58; 7. Hobie Alter Jr.-Rick Edgington, Capistrano Beach, 60½; 8. Carlton Tucker-Rick Bennett, Florida, 67½; 9. Bob Johnson-Wall Thompson, Florida, 70; 10. Bill Whitehurst-Mike Johnson, Florida, 72.

Dana Belles starts

Light to moderate winds greeted the 15 women skippers and crews who turned out Saturday for the first two races of Dana Point Yacht Club's Dana Belles Series. This is the eighth year of the popular women's sailing event.

The first race was sailed over a 3.7-mile course in extremely light winds. The second race of 5.7 miles fared slightly better with winds ranging 8 to 10 knots.

The fleet is divided into two classes — 11 boats sailing with spinnakers and four boats without spinnakers.

Trophy winners:
First race, Spinnaker Class: 1. Valkyrie, Sue Murray, Capo BYC; 2. Rock N Roll, Sue Rogers, DPYC; 3. Sunshine, Joan Malanosky, DPYC.
NO SPINNAKER — 1. Mistral, Carolyn Penner, DPYC; 2. Sunset, Patti Mace, DPYC; 3. Penelope, Charmaine Coker, unaffiliated.
Second race, Spinnaker: 1. Runaway II, Cheryl Wiebe, VYC; 2. Sunshine, Joan Malanosky, DPYC; 3. Rock N Roll, Sue Rogers, DPYC.
NO SPINNAKER — 1. Sunset, Patti Mace, DPYC; 2. Mistral, Carolyn Penner, DPYC; 3. Martineque, Mary Cooper, Capo BYC.

Audacious wins race

Mike Kennedy's Audacious was the overall and Class A winner Sunday in the third race of Dana Point Yacht Club's series for Performance Handicap Racing Fleet yachts.

The race was sailed off Dana Point in a moderate 8-10 knot breeze.

CLASS A — 1. Audacious; 2. California Gold; 3. Innovator, Bruce Anderson, Capo BYC.
CLASS B — 1. Mackinac; 2. Valkyrie, Bill Murray, Capo BYC; 3. Rock N Roll, Jeff and Sue Rogers, DPYC.
CLASS D — 1. Sunshine, Ron Malanosky, DPYC; 2. Breakaway, Gary Allen, DPYC; 3. Daybreak, Bob Gates, Capo BYC.

Can't rap MacPhail

Ump's attorney speaks out on Martin

NEW YORK (AP) — The attorney for the baseball umpires union is satisfied that American League President Lee MacPhail acted properly in quickly suspending Oakland Manager Billy Martin for an indefinite period for bumping umpire Terry Cooney. But Richie Phillips won't rest his case until MacPhail makes the punishment stick for an appropriate amount of time.

"So far, I can't knock MacPhail," said Phillips. "I would expect the penalty to be commensurate with the violation."

MacPhail planned to see films of the incident for the first time today before determining the length of the suspension.

Phillips has already reviewed the film, rating it excessively violent. "I can't allow umpires to be in the position where their physical well-being is jeopardized," he said. "It was fortunate this happened in Toronto and not Oakland, where he could have really whipped up the fans."

During the A's game in Toronto against the Blue Jays Friday night, Martin disputed numerous calls by Cooney, the home plate umpire. Finally, Martin was ejected for the first time this season. He then charged the 200-pound umpire, hitting him with his chest and knocking him backward. Then he kicked some dirt at Cooney and threw two handfuls of it at his back.

Saturday morning, MacPhail's suspension of Martin was announced. "Normally there is a hearing or a man has a right to immediate appeal and his suspension is held in abeyance," Phillips said. "I talked to MacPhail after he made his decision. In this case, he felt it was too serious to wait."

Van Linge, Leonard win

Jerry Van Linge and Tom Leonard captured their fifth straight Adoption Guild men's open doubles championship Sunday by defeating Dick Miller and Bob Hochstadler, 6-1, 6-3, before 3,000 fans at the Newport Beach Tennis Club.

Gail Glasgow and Susan Warfield repeated as women's open champions with a 6-4, 6-1 win over Ellen Bryant and Helen Weiner with Glasgow and Leonard teaming for the open mixed doubles title by downing Hilary Moor and Dave Bohannon, 6-2, 6-3.

Sunday's action completed the 1981 tournament with champions crowned in five other divisions.

Miami wins on Maine errors

From AP Dispatches

OMAHA — Miami University found some late-inning offense and took advantage of some Maine errors Sunday night for a 6-1 victory in an opening-round game in the College Baseball World Series.

Winner Neal Heaton, 16-0, allowed six singles in eight innings. He fanned eight and walked two.

Maine pitcher Stu Lacognata kept the Bears in contention through six innings. With the score tied at 1-1, second-ranked Miami took the lead in the seventh inning on a two-base error of Frank Castro's ground ball, a sacrifice and a single by Mitch Seoane.

The Hurricanes, now 61-8, picked up two more in the eighth when Sam Sorce hit a two-out triple followed by a single by Alex DeJesus, who took third on a two-base error. Castro doubled DeJesus home.

Seoane and Bill Wrona opened the ninth with infield singles and scored insurance runs on a pair of Maine errors.

The Bears fell to 32-13. Miami will take on Oklahoma State in Wednesday's winners bracket game while Maine meets South Carolina tonight in an elimination contest.

In the other game tonight, first-day losers Michigan (41-19) and Texas (58-10-11) meet. Losers of both games will be eliminated from the tournament.

Pleasure trip turns tragic as 9 perish

HONOLULU (AP) — It was supposed to have been a two-hour, 23-mile pleasure cruise on a 20-foot cabin cruiser for 21 residents of the sparsely populated island nation of Kiribati.

Two months and 1,300 miles later, nine were dead and the other 12 had survived only by drinking rainwater or sea water and eating fish — including a shark — that they had caught with their bear hands.

The survivors were reported in good condition Sunday at a hospital on Moen Island in the Truk District of the U.S. Trust Territory of the Pacific. A hospital nurse said all 12 — including a 3-year-old boy — probably would be released and flown home in about a week.

The islanders had drifted helplessly in the Pacific Ocean for 60 days until they were spotted Friday by the helicopter of a San Diego-based tuna boat about 700 miles southeast of Guam.

Their cramped cabin cruiser left Abaiang Island the morning of March 26 to bring the people to Tarawa, the capital of Kiribati, formerly known as the Gilbert Islands.

"A good term to describe the boat would be overcrowded," said Quartermaster Mike McKiernan, a Coast Guard spokesman on Guam.

But Cinrata Teaanene, a police constable on Tarawa, said it is not unusual for ships on short trips in Kiribati to be crowded because there is a shortage of boats in the poor island nation.

Most of the people on board for the two-hour trip were headed to Tarawa for a vacation, Teaanene said. The rest were bringing food to a market there.

But at one point the ship's only engine failed and the boat began drifting to the west, McKiernan said. As prevailing currents carried the boat through an area of few landfalls, the islanders lived on the goods that were being taken to the market.

The supply of fresh water lasted about four days; the food about two weeks, which was just about as long as the Kiribati Marine Guard hunted for the missing ship.

After that, funeral services were held for many of the missing.

"We searched, but we didn't know where to look," Teaanene said. "I think all the people thought they were dead, but hoped they were alive."

Once the initial supplies ran out, those on the ship survived by catching rainwater and fish with their bare hands, said Coast Guard spokesman Keith Spangler in Honolulu. He said their last fish, a shark, was caught two weeks ago.

"Each rainfall would provide enough water for about three or four days," he said. When no rain fell, the islanders drank sea water.

The Coast Guard has not yet been able to determine when people began dying on board the ship.

"That's something we're hoping to hear from the officials on Truk on Monday," McKiernan said Sunday. He said officials believe the bodies of the dead were buried at sea one by one.

Jury analyzes housing woes

By GLENN SCOTT
Of the Daily Pilot Staff

More investment money and less speculation were prescribed today by the Orange County Grand Jury to remedy the county's affordable housing woes.

But in their diagnosis of a complex problem, grand jury members were hesitant to claim that any practical solution is available to help more residents afford their own homes.

"Given the realities of land costs, financing costs, labor and material costs, plus delays, affordable housing is an elusive goal," grand jury members concluded in their 13-page report.

It is the fifth report issued by the busy grand jury in the last 15 days. The 19-member group has issued 13 reports since last July.

Among recommendations for the County Board of Supervisors was that more mortgage money needs to be created through investments, more rental housing should be built and that administrators of affordable housing programs must get tougher to curb speculation.

Grand jury members said state legislation could be created to give private investors the privilege of selling bonds for affordable housing mortgages under the same tax exempt status as governments have.

Members said owners of businesses and industries also could

More banks slash prime rate to 20%

NEW YORK (AP) — More major banks cut their prime lending rates to 20 percent today, and a smaller bank in St. Louis cut its rate even further amid talk that interest rates may have peaked.

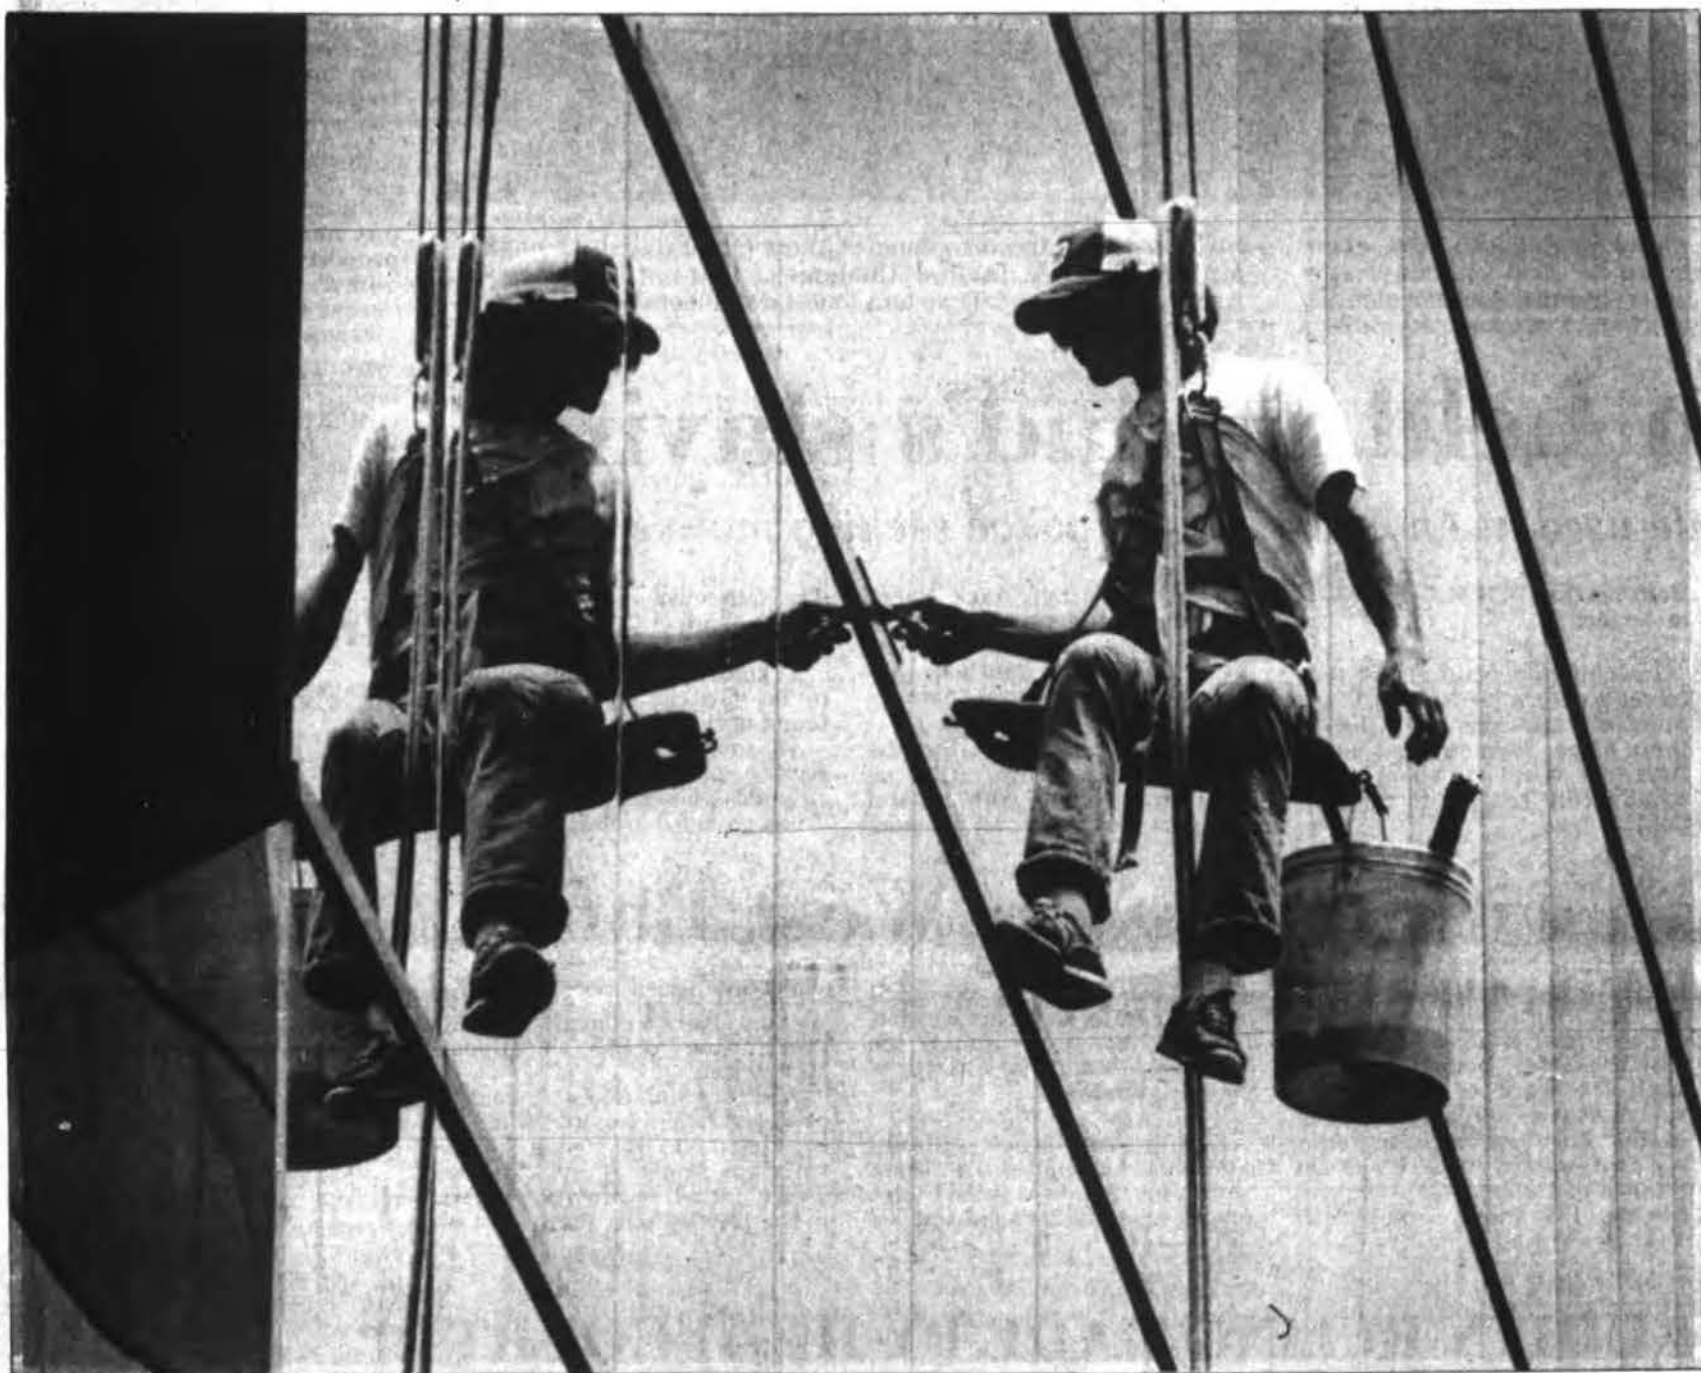

Continental Illinois National Bank of Chicago and Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. of New York announced the cuts to 20 percent from 20.5 percent, matching a reduction made Thursday by Chase Manhattan Bank of New York and a few smaller banks. Other major banks were expected to follow.

In St. Louis, Southwest Bank cut its prime rate to 19.5 percent. The prime is the base rate charged by banks on loans to commercial and industrial customers. The widespread feeling that rates may decline was aided by the report by the Federal Reserve Board late Friday that the nation's basic money supply fell for the second straight week.

"I feel interest rates have peaked and that we are probably in the process of a sustained decline," said Robert Schwartz, senior financial economist at Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc., the nation's largest investment firm, following that report.

Expectations that rates have peaked also caused the dollar to slip in trading against most major currencies. High interest rates make investments in dollars more attractive.

High court overrules nude dancing ban

Use of zoning powers violates constitutional rights of freedom of speech

WASHINGTON (AP) — Local governments cannot use their zoning powers to ban all live nude dancing, the Supreme Court ruled today.

By a 7-2 vote, the justices said such a comprehensive ban violates constitutional rights to freedom of speech and expression.

Today's case involved Mt. Ephraim, N.J., which banned within its boundaries all nude dancing and all other forms of live entertainment.

"In this case, Mt. Ephraim has not adequately justified its substantial restriction of protected activity. None of the justifications asserted in this court was articulated by the state courts and none of them withstands scrutiny," Justice Byron R. White said in an opinion for the majority.

White continued that it did not "appear that Mt. Ephraim's zoning authority has arrived at a defensible conclusion that unusual problems are presented by live entertainment."

In today's case, the high court overturned the 1978 convictions of James F. Schadt and Juliette Ann DiLuciano on charges of offering live nude dancing as a form of entertainment at an establishment known as Six Thirteen. Each had been fined $300.

In other action today, the high court:

— Agreed to decide whether California or Texas gets to tax the Howard Hughes estate, valued at up to $1.1 billion. The high court must determine which state was Hughes' chief residence when he died April 5, 1976.

— Blocked again the release of secret computer tapes that the government says could show tax cheaters how to avoid getting caught. The high court granted the government's request for a postponement of an appeals court order to turn the Internal Revenue Service material over to a Bellevue, Wash., couple.

— Agreed to decide whether Minnesota officials can scrutinize financial operations of the Rev. Sun Myung Moon's Unification Church. The justices will review a ruling that the state's strict financial reporting and disclosure requirements for religious groups like the Unification Church are unconstitutional.

— Rejected a challenge to Navy regulations that required the discharge of sailors who engage in homosexual acts. Gov-

Blood coats Beirut beaches

Syria soldiers, Christian militia kill civilians

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syrian soldiers and Christian militiamen rocketed, shelled and sniped at each other today in a second straight day of fighting that left at least 23 civilians dead and 276 injured, many of them on Beirut's beaches, police said.

A police spokesman said the Lebanese capital's Mediterranean shores, jammed with bathers, were a major target for the gunners Sunday. It was the first time the beaches had been shelled since the nation's 1975-76 civil war, and Beirut newspapers called the bombardment the "beach war."

Exchanges of artillery, rocket and gunfire between Moslem and Christian sectors of the Lebanese capital began late Saturday. They reached a crescendo at midafternoon Sunday and subsided to sporadic sniping at sundown.

Innocent sunbathers slaughtered

neighborhoods. The Christian "Voice of Lebanon" radio said three Christian children, a 2-year-old boy and two sisters aged 3½ and 4½, were killed when a shell slammed into their home.

The casualties pushed the Lebanese toll to more than 550 dead since April 1.

Sniping and artillery duels also were reported in the Christian city of Zahle, 30 miles to the east in the Bekaa Valley, where a Christian attempt to open a military supply road ignited the Syrian-Christian fighting at the start of April and led to Syria's deployment of Soviet-made SAM-6 missiles at the end of the month.

As U.S. envoy Philip Habib prepared to return to the Middle East to try again to resolve the Syrian-Israeli dispute over the missiles, Syria's foreign minister reiterated his government's refusal to remove them from Lebanon, and the leader of the Lebanese Christians fighting the Syrians said war is imminent.

2 aliens in fight; one dead

Santa Ana police investigators are searching today for a man who witnesses said shot and killed another man in what a detective called "basically a macho type situation."

Dead is Manuel Barrasa, 23, a laborer who lived in a Myrtle Street apartment complex. Police said they are searching for Sirilo Venegas, another laborer who lived nearby and allegedly fled in his car after the shooting.

Both men were from Mexico and had entered the United States illegally, said investigator Perrell Buckles.

He said several witnesses said the suspect, who allegedly was in a bad mood from another argument, started "bad-mouthing" Barrasa and some friends early Sunday morning.

Witnesses said the suspect pulled a knife on Barrasa, but when the victim came up with his own knife, the suspect left and returned with an automatic pistol, Buckles said.

Barrasa then was shot after he was challenged, the detective said. Barrasa was pronounced dead at the scene at 4:20 a.m. by paramedics, he said.

spotted the cabin cruiser, using several bedsheets as a makeshift sail, in waters north of Truk. Helicopters are often used by large fishing vessels to search for schools of fish from the air, McKiernan said.

The survivors were picked up by the fishing boat, transferred to a Trust Territory field ship and brought to Moen, McKiernan said.

A hospital nurse said the survivors, were suffering from varying degrees of malnutrition and exposure, but were in "good shape, considering everything."

Inmates flee Georgia jail; six at large

SAVANNAH, Ga. (AP) — Inmates wielding a razor overpowered a guard and pressed a fire-door button, opening jail-cell doors at the new Coastal Correctional Institution and allowing 11 prisoners to escape, officials said.

Three didn't get far after the escape Sunday night, two were caught early today and six still were at large.

The incident occurred at 5:55 p.m. Sunday PDT when four prisoners overpowered an officer and pushed a button that opened doors to cells containing 95 inmates in one of the prison's living modules, said Sara Englade, a spokeswoman for the Georgia Department of Offender Rehabilitation.

Eighty-four prisoners stayed in the jail but 11 fled. The guard was uninjured, she said.

It was not immediately clear whether the four inmates who overpowered the guard were among those who escaped, Mrs. Englade said.

Baby early — train late

CHICAGO (AP) — A rapid transit train here was delayed about 10 minutes, but instead of complaining commuters applauded as a 23-year-old woman gave birth to a baby girl.

The mother, Christine Clark, and her baby, Veronica Ann, were taken to Michael Reese Hospital, where both were reported in good condition Sunday.

Veronica was born at 12:22 p.m. Saturday as the train pulled into an elevated station in downtown Chicago. Her father, Jimmy Harris, caught Veronica in his arms as she came into the world, hospital administrator Dolores Yancey said, and commuters offered assistance and a blanket.

Countian held in dad's slaying

Hatchet, butcher knife used in Anaheim attack; police seeking motive

An Anaheim man was jailed Sunday after police said he confessed to killing his father with a hatchet and butcher knife.

Charles Thomas Hudec, 25, was being held today in the Anaheim City Jail on $250,000 bail in connection with the death of his father, Frank Hudec, 62,

Both lived at 2424 E. Tryon Ave. in Anaheim.

Investigators said today they haven't determined why the son allegedly attacked his father in their home, then stopped an officer in a patrol car about 3 a.m. to allegedly confess to the incident.

When police Sgt. Jack Parra and other officers reached the locked house, they heard a cry for help through a bedroom window, said Officer Dennis Sair.

The officers broke into the home and found the father on the bedroom floor with several stab and chop wounds, he said.

The father was taken to the UC Irvine Medical Center in Orange but died in surgery, Sair said.

A knife and hatchet believed to be used in the attack were found at the house, he said.

Youths clash with troops on West Bank

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Rock-throwing Palestinian youths clashed with Israeli troops in Nablus and Ramallah on the occupied West Bank today, Israel Radio reported. The demonstrations came a day before the first anniversary of car bombings that maimed the mayors of the two towns.

Troops used tear gas against students demonstrating at Al Najah college in Nablus, the main West Bank town, Israel Radio said.

It said that in Ramallah the south, youths blocked the streets with burning tires, threw rocks, waved the Palestinian flag and demanded an end to Jewish settlement in the West Bank, seized by Israel from Jordan in the 1967 Mideast war.

The bomb attacks on June 2, 1980 are widely believed to have been the work of Jewish terrorists, but no arrests have been made. The bombings seriously wounded mayors Bassam Shakaa of Nablus, who lost both legs at the knees, and Karim

Khalaf, who lost part of his left foot and suffered other injuries. The two men were among the most vocal radical spokesmen in the West Bank.

Earlier, the Israeli military command announced a military court on Sunday jailed five Arabs, from the Israeli occupied

Golan Heights, for three months without trial on charges of inciting fellow Arabs to oppose Israeli rule.

The announcement aroused protests today among some of the area's 15,000-strong Druse residents in the Golan Heights, which Israel seized from Syria in the 1967 Mideast War.

NUDITY RULING MADE BY HIGH COURT

ernment lawyers had noted that the disputed regulations already have been discarded.

— Ruled that penniless men trying to fend off paternity suits sometimes can force states to pay for blood-grouping tests. The justices unanimously struck down as unconstitutional Connecticut's policy of not providing such free tests when paternity defendants could not afford them.

In the nude dancing case, New Jersey appeals courts upheld the convictions and the borough's zoning ordinance as applied to Six Thirteen. The State Supreme Court refused to review the case last Jan. 18.

— Refused to halt an antitrust suit aimed at an international uranium cartel.

In asking for the rarely granted order, Gulf Oil Corp. and Gulf Minerals Canada Ltd., two of the defendants in the suit, claimed that the cartel is shielded from U.S. courts' scrutiny because its actions were "mandated" by the countries involved — Canada, France, South Africa and Australia.

— Agreed to decide whether local governments can enact wide ranging regulations of stores selling drug paraphernalia.

Drug paraphernalia laws have been passed in various forms nationwide in an attempt to cut down the number of "head shops" and to curb abuse of marijuana and other drugs.

Today's case involved the Village of Hoffman Estates, Ill., which enacted the regulations on Feb. 20, 1978.

Unlike many of the ordinances enacted in other cities and towns, the Hoffman Estates law only licenses and regulates the sales of drug paraphernalia and does not criminalize the use or possession of such items.

— Agreed to decide whether states may ban certain truthful language from lawyer advertisements.

The justices said they will study a constitutional challenge to a Missouri Supreme Court rule banning certain language from all lawyer ads.

Today's action marks the first time the nation's highest court has agreed to study fully a dispute growing out of its 1977 decision that struck down the legal profession's longtime ban on lawyer advertising as an unconstitutional infringement on free speech.

That 1977 rule left it to the states to regulate the manner, time and place of lawyer advertising. And in the past four years, the Supreme Court has refused to reopen its study of the issue.

The case granted review Monday stems from disciplinary action taken against Richard M. Jacobs, a Clayton, Mo., lawyer, who sent out in a mailing an announcement of the opening of his office.

get tax incentives to finance or build housing for their employees.

The grand jury objected to the fact that buyers of affordable units can own other property, under guidelines of the Orange County inclusionary housing program.

They added that the county should control cases where speculators sign agreements to own and occupy a unit, then rent it anyway.

Members also objected to a procedure where builders can trade or sell credits to build affordable units. "These credits have no value limit and are worth whatever the market for them will allow," members said in the report.

Under the county's affordable housing program, builders are required to include so-called affordable units in 25 percent of all developments of five or more units. The units must be priced so lenders will qualify buyers who make up to 120 percent of the county's median income.

The median currently is about $24,500 a year, according to the grand jury.

F.W. Olson, manager of the county's Information and Housing Development Office, said today that county procedures do control most of the grand jury's concerns.

Olson said some buyers coming from outside Southern California couldn't make a down payment without using other property as equity, although he added: "Obviously we're concerned if somebody walks in and already has a home."

He also added that allowing builders to barter credits for affordable units hasn't proved to be a problem, let alone an abuse. He said the practice gives builders flexibility to design smaller developments without rigid requirements.

Crash victims recovered off Catalina

AVALON (AP) — A mini-submarine has recovered the bodies of two of the three people believed to have been in a light aircraft that crashed into the waters off Catalina Island three days earlier.

The sub, owned by Undersea Graphics, of Torrance, was successful in locating the plane on Sunday at a depth of 260 feet, beyond where deep sea divers had been able to search, according to the Sheriff's Department.

The bodies, a male and a female, were not immediately identified, said Deputy John Radeliff. They were found clear of the wreckage of the twin-engine plane in which three people were believed to be flying when it left Avalon, then went down, exploding as it hit the water.

No plans have been disclosed yet regarding a search for the third person, and the "possibility of a fourth" person aboard is still unconfirmed, said Radeliff.

The Federal Aviation Administration called in the mini-sub company after divers failed to find the wreckage or the victims because of the depth of the water. The three people believed to be aboard the plane were: pilot Steven Stonerod of Tulare; Gary Lourenco of Tulare; and Colleen Knight of Visalia.

Graduation has touch of royalty

While his parents and a crush of photographers looked on, Prince Albert of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., criticized the Reagan administration's proposed student aid and social security cuts in a commencement address to 1,000 graduates of the University of Massachusetts' Boston campus. His mother, Rose Fitzgerald Kennedy, 90, received an honorary doctorate of humane letters at the Sunday ceremonies.

Monaco graduated from Amherst College.

The 23-year-old prince, listed in the commencement program as Albert Alexandre Louis Pierre Grimaldi, was surrounded on Sunday by photographers and private guards as he marched from the ceremonies with his 423 fellow graduates at the school in Amherst, Mass.

His parents, Princess Grace and Prince Rainier, ducked out early to avoid publicity, but the crush disrupted the proceedings and one other student was nearly knocked over in the commotion. The prince earned a bachelor of arts degree in political science.

His parents and sister, Princess Caroline, watched from wooden bleacher seats in a back corner of the gymnasium.

Nancy Rehnquist, daughter of U.S. Supreme Court Justice William Rehnquist, was also among those who graduated.

Last week went from labor negotiations to just plain labor for Sam and Patti Church.

The president of the United Mine Workers Union finished off a long session with coal company representatives at 1 a.m. Friday and secured a tentative contract for striking soft-coal miners. At 10 that night, Mrs. Church went into labor. Her session ended at 4 a.m. Saturday in a Charleston, W.Va. hospital when she gave birth to an 8-pound, 12-ounce son. He's the couple's first child. Church said Mrs. Church, 24, and son, were doing fine.

Martha Mitchell's son has returned to her Pine Bluff, Ark. birthplace to unveil a life-size bronze bust of his mother on the fifth anniversary of her death.

About 200 people watched Jay Jennings Jr., 34, on Sunday unveil the memorial, which rests on a polished granite pedestal and carries a bronze plaque with a biblical inscription from John 8:32: "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

Jennings, Mrs. Mitchell's son by her first husband, used the occasion to take a few jabs at his mother's second husband, former Attorney General John Mitchell, who went to jail for Watergate-related crimes during the administration of former President Richard Nixon.

Mitchell did not attend the ceremony.

More than half a million dollars will go to the ex-husband of Neva Rockefeller Kaiser, daughter of financier David Rockefeller, under the terms of a no-fault divorce.

Walter J. Kaiser, a Harvard literature professor, will receive $529,760 which includes half the fair market value of the couple's Cambridge, Mass. home and art collection and about $40,000.

The divorce was granted last week by Middlesex Probate Judge Edward M. Ginsburg.

Bridging culture gaps

Of the Daily Pilot Staff

The film begins with several shots taken in one of the many Indochinese refugee neighborhoods in central Orange County.

Young children race their Big Wheels and bicycles on the sidewalk in front of the aging tenements where they live, while their mothers and grandmothers stand watching and chatting in the shade of the buildings.

The narration begins: "History has time and again shown us that the immersion of another culture into our society is not all that traumatic, and eventually it is accepted without a second thought."

"You have only to look at the many European immigrants who have settled here to find evidence that our country is truly a melting pot, and will bear the inclusion of yet another large resettlement of people from another country."

That's the tone of a series of video tapes now being produced by a coalition of law enforcement agencies called TOPAR, or Task Force on Police-Asian Relations.

With more than 65,000 Indochinese refugees already in Orange County — primarily in Garden Grove, Santa Ana and Westminster — and an additional 1,000 more arriving each month, the three city police departments decided something had to be done to enhance relations with the emerging ethnic community.

TOPAR was organized in November 1980 when there were few resources available to train police officers in communicating with Asian-Americans.

The group recently completed six video tapes to be shown to police and refugee organizations in cooperation with Teleprompter Cable Television Systems' public service program.

Two of the tapes are for police officers, and explain cultural differences to be considered when conducting home interviews, issuing traffic tickets, investigating accidents and administering drunken driving tests.

Four tapes for refugee audiences are now being edited, and will be distributed soon.

Each tape is being narrated in Vietnamese, Cambodian and Laotian. The tapes' purpose is to help orient the refugees on what may be expected of police, and explain their role in American society.

The two police officer training tapes were shown at a presentation sponsored by TOPAR and Teleprompter last Thursday at the Garden Grove Community Center.

The first tape explains why some Indochinese refugees may be hesitant to make contact with a police officer.

The narrator asks the officers to imagine that in their old country "the police were not respected, and in some cases feared."

In fact, many policemen in Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos were poorly educated, lacked Western moral scruples, abused their power, were easily bribed and often extorted others.

The narrator also asks police to remember that in Asian households the father dominates the home and to address him first when conducting an interview.

Cultural practices such as "coin rubbing" are also discussed. Rubbing a coin on the back of the neck is believed by some to cause the "bad air" or spirit to leave an ailing person.

In the past, the marks left by the coin have been misinterpreted as fingernail scratches by police officers who noticed them on the necks of small children.

"Blood drawn to the skin surface by rubbing might appear to be child abuse," the tape narration says. "But examining and understanding this cultural tradition should discount this."

After viewing TOPAR's "New Neighbors New Friends" tape series, Westminster Police Chief Jack Shockly said police officers have a special responsibility in dealing with Indo-Chinese refugees.

"We are the most visible arm of government, and will represent to these people the morals and political system of our country," Shockly said.

"As police officers we must be consistent in our actions. The educational program that will accompany these tapes should help us bridge the cultural gap between us and these new Americans."

MACKSBURG, Iowa (AP) — The National Skillet Throwing Championships are planned for June 20 and 21 in Macksburg, but sponsors face a problem — a skillet shortage.

So organizers are asking for skillet donations, but they don't want just any kind. They're after old, 10-inch cast-steel skillets, most made in the 1940s.

Chicago embroiled in transit crisis

CHICAGO (AP) — With three suburban bus systems closed and others running out of money, Mayor Jane Byrne emerged from weekend meetings with legislators saying no decisions had been made on how to resolve the mass transit crisis here.

"For anybody to presuppose that anything has been decided here . . . would be very wrong," Mrs. Byrne said Sunday night at City Hall.

She huddled with legislative leaders of both parties behind closed doors Saturday and Sunday and they drew up a list of 10 issues they said the Legislature must consider if it is to resolve money problems facing the Regional Transportation Authority, which subsidizes mass transit in six counties.

Atlanta summer kids' project out?

ATLANTA (AP) — An ambitious summer recreation program drawn up in the wake of the slayings of young blacks may be trimmed because school ends this week, and organizers say money is short.

"Safe Summer '81" will get $460,000 in federal money, but officials say another $445,800 is needed from Atlanta. $149,600 from Fulton County and $189,600 from DeKalb County.

Kuwait amassing American securities

CHICAGO (AP) — Oil-rich Kuwait has amassed close to $7 billion worth of American securities, and that amount could swell to roughly $8 billion by the end of the year, according to a published report.

In a copyrighted story in Sunday's editions, the Chicago Tribune said it had obtained confidential bank documents detailing for the first time with an OPEC nation's holdings in the United States.

Anti-Castro exiles freed in slaying

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two anti-Castro Cuban exiles have been acquitted of the 1976 bomb slaying of Orlando Letelier, Chile's ambassador to the United States during the administration of Marxist President Salvador Allende.

The verdict in the 14-day retrial of Guillermo Novo Sampol, 41, and Alvin Ross Diaz, 48, was returned by a U.S. District Court jury Saturday following 17 hours of deliberations over three days.

Irish terrorists take 2 more lives

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — A part-time policeman was shot and killed as he guarded a prisoner inside a Belfast hospital, and a British army bomb expert was killed when a booby-trapped car he was examining blew up.

The Irish Republican Army said the killings Sunday were its work. The known death toll in nearly 12 years of sectarian warfare in Northern Ireland rose to 2,118.

Eyewitnesses at the Royal Victoria Hospital, in the Catholic Fall's Road area, said two men and a woman approached the constable as he stood outside the intensive care ward, opened fire at point-blank range and fled through the emergency ward as patients screamed.

Bangladesh coup attempt thwarted

DACCA, Bangladesh (AP) — The government today claimed it crushed the 48-hour rebellion by army officers who assassinated President Ziaur Rahman Saturday and took over the garrison city of Chittagong.

Communications between the capital and Chittagong, the nation's second-largest city, were restored and Radio Dacca said it had regained control of its station in Chittagong and reported life there was returning to normal.

Poland mourns Cardinal Wyszynski

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Eulogized by the Vatican as a "hero of the church of our times," Cardinal Stefan Wyszyński was buried in the crypt of St. John's Cathedral after a nationally televised outdoor funeral attended by more than 250,000 Poles, including leaders of the Communist government.

"All Poland is taking part in the funeral," the official news agency PAP said Sunday.

PLO envoy slain in Belgium attack

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Naim Khader, Palestine Liberation Organization representative in Belgium, was killed today by a gunman firing from a car with West German license plates, police said.

The police said Khader was hit with five heavy-caliber bullets about 9 a.m. as he walked toward the PLO office in the fashionable Brussels University district.

Sub commander removed

Discipline result of Japanese freighter collision

TOKYO (AP) — The commanding officer of the U.S. submarine George Washington and one of his deck officers have been relieved from duty and reprimanded because of the sub's collision with a Japanese freighter April 9, the U.S. Embassy said today.

The Nissho Maru sank following the collision in the East China Sea and its captain and first mate died. Surviving crewmen from the Japanese vessel said the submarine surfaced briefly after the accident, then submerged and left without attempting a rescue.

U.S. Embassy spokesman John Ohta disclosed the disciplinary action against the officers and said it is subject to appeal and review by higher naval authorities.

The Navy announced earlier that Cmdr. Robert Woehl and Lt. R.D. Hampton were being temporarily reassigned while the accident was investigated.

The actions of the submarine and the failure of U.S. authorities to notify the Japanese government of the accident for more than 24 hours were angrily denounced in Japan, and the Japanese Maritime Safety Agency is conducting its own investigation.

U.S. officials said last month a preliminary report showed the Americans did not realize the Japanese ship was sinking. But they said the Navy would accept liability for the collision.

Lawyers for the ship's owners and crew seek $4.5 million in damages.

Teamsters insiders battle

Williams backers have upper hand at convention

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Teamsters dissidents, who lost a challenge to the way convention delegates are selected, are resorting to constitutional amendments and picket signs to fight the election of Roy Lee Williams to a five-year term as union president.

It no doubt was an uphill battle, even though the 66-year-old Williams was indicted last month by a federal grand jury on charges of conspiring to bribe a senator.

On the eve of today's opening of the union's convention in this gambling resort, a dissident leader said the Labor Department had refused to overrule the delegate-selection process.

Ken Paff, a national organizer of the Teamsters for a Democratic Union, said the decision was relayed to the organization's Washington lawyer, Arthur Fox, by Solicitor of Labor Timothy Ryan Jr.

"I really think they basically have evaded the issue," Paff said, contending that only about 10 percent of the approximately 2,200 delegates taking part here were elected directly by the union's 2 million rank-and-file members.

The Labor Department has declined comment on the challenge. The TDU petitioned the agency January 18 to rule that the union's way of selecting delegates violated the Landrum-Griffin Act.

Williams was named interim president by the union executive board following the death of Frank Fitzsimmons last month. His only challenger for the permanent post is Pete Camarata of the TDU.

Williams subsequently was branded a tool of organized crime by a Senate investigative committee. On May 22, he was indicted in Chicago. He has called the bribery charges "a damn lie."

Paff and other dissidents claim the convention is stacked in Williams' favor. The vast majority of delegates was selected by the leaders of 746 Teamsters locals rather than by the rank and file.

Wheelchair marathon ends

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — Wheelchair-bound athletes Roger Nelson and Jerry Martin finally have rolled into their hometown after completing a 29-day, 1,000-mile trip they're calling "the longest mile."

Mayor Ron Bair presented the keys to the city Sunday.

Nelson, 27, and Martin, 31, left May 3 on their around-the-state trip to raise money for athletic programs for the disabled. With some pledges still to be paid, Nelson said, they expect to come close to meeting their goal of $100,000.

The duo averaged about 40 miles a day, rolling along back-country roads and highways 10 to 12 hours a day.

They were accompanied by friends in cars. In some towns and cities, they stayed at the homes of supporters, but most nights were spent sleeping in a van.

"We felt like a band of roving gypsies," Nelson said.

He and Martin wheeled themselves over all types of terrain and through rain, snow, hail and heat.

"This is the hardest wheelchair run ever attempted, and we were completely successful," Nelson said.

Their trip began along the Idaho-Washington border about 17 miles northeast of Spokane

Donna has gala welcome

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Shortly after her gala return to her golf course home, Donna the Duck was apparently adjusting well to life without an arrow in her breast.

"She's out enjoying herself in the pond on the 18th hole right now," said Bill Acker, a Sahara County Club executive. "She's doing fine, although she's switched homes from her pond on the 13th hole."

Donna, who spent the last five days at an animal hospital recovering from her wound, was flown home by helicopter Saturday to freedom and a champagne reception in her honor.

As a crowd of media and well-wishers stood by, two helicopters, one carrying an advance team, the other Donna, landed on a practice green at the country club. A red carpet was rolled out and champagne uncorked to toast the return of the duck.

After a brief presentation of a jar of cracked corn for Donna, she was taken by golf cart to the pond where photographers and television camera crews recorded her return home. She flew into the distance, followed closely by her mate.

3 injured, 2 held in street brawl

INGLEWOOD (AP) — Three people were hospitalized — two with gunshot wounds — and two were booked for investigation of attempted murder after police officers who tried to break up a street fight were shot at from a Cuban relocation center apartment building, police said.

None of the officers was injured in the fracas Sunday which apparently started as a street brawl between a group of about 15 black and Cuban residents of the area, said Sgt. Normand Brewer.

He said area blacks poured into an alley near the Cuban residence at Flower Street and Century Boulevard when someone said that a group of Cubans were "hassling" a black prostitute there.

When the eight responding officers started breaking up the fight, several people fled into the apartment building and between four and six shots were fired from the upper level of the 10-unit building, Brewer said.

The officers took cover, and the area was cleared when backup officers arrived, followed by the Special Weapons and Tactics team.

James Smith, 34, of Marina del Rey, who was in satisfactory condition at Centinela Valley Community Hospital after being shot in the leg, told police he was an "innocent bystander," Brewer said.

Norberto Madero, 22, a Cuban refugee, was reported in stable condition at Martin Luther King Hospital where he was being treated for a head wound resulting from a pipe blow, according to Brewer.

Another gunshot victim, not yet identified by police, was treated for a side wound at Centinela Hospital and was being transferred to the county jail because police believe he was one of those who did the shooting, Brewer said.

Arrested and booked for investigation of attempted murder were Cuban refugees Pedro Sanchez, 24, and Ramon Gainza, 32, who surrendered when the SWAT team shouted for them to come out of the apartment building, Brewer said. Weapons were also recovered by police, he said.

Police officers and the SWAT team evacuated the building, where 35 Cubans are being housed for three months, according to Brewer, then searched each apartment.

Vets continue sit-in

Protesters dispute non-support claim by Vietnam Veterans

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A group of Vietnam veterans say they will continue a hunger strike and a sit-in at the Veterans Administration hospital here despite a message from the executive director of a national Vietnam veterans' organization calling for an end to the protest.

Twelve veterans camped on the lawn of the Wadsworth VA hospital, some of whom claim not to have eaten since May 20, and six others staging a sit-in in the hospital lobby said Sunday they doubt that the sentiments of Robert O. Muller of the Washington-based Vietnam Veterans of America represent the feelings of his membership.

Administrator Donald Custis said last week the group "committed the President to the most significant goals Vietnam veterans have been lobbying for."

The Vietnam Veterans of America "do not support your continuing protest," Muller added.

"Ask him if it (Muller's message) was based on a vote by members of the organization," said Max Inglett, a paraplegic veteran who said he has gone without solid food since May 24 and without any fluid except water since Saturday evening.

Inglett said Vietnam Veterans of America nationwide have called to sympathize with their campaign for improvements in VA health care.

Inglett and Ron Kovic, who is also wheelchair-bound but is not fasting, put the protesters' demands personally to U.S. Attorney General William French Smith Saturday during Smith's visit to the University of California at Los Angeles in nearby Westwood.

"He said he would relay the message to the president," Inglett said.

A spokesman for Smith, Tom DeCari, said the attorney general meant only that he would convey the veterans' requests "to the appropriate people."

A personal meeting with President Reagan was one of four demands repeated by the sit-in protesters in response to Custis' letter of May 28. The others were for independent evaluations of VA hospitals nationwide, improved procedures for diagnosing problems caused by exposure to toxic herbicides such as Agent Orange, and medical examinations of all 4.2 million Vietnam veterans for current disabilities.

Some of the hunger strikers, who say they have more to lose than those who are simply staging the sit-in, do not demand to see the president personally, but they want a definite commitment from him to eliminate veterans aid cutbacks and investigate the Veterans Administration and health services.

In his letter, Custis said there would be no cutbacks in the medical and surgical VA staffs, that the budget for research into Agent Orange would be tripled in the next fiscal year and that the total VA budget would be increased by $1.3 billion to $24.2 billion in fiscal 1982.

However, the protesters say the letter simply recapped previous budget actions without pledging anything new.

The protesters began their vigil three days after the death of James Hopkins, a 32-year-old Vietnam veteran who two months earlier had crashed a jeep through the hospital's glass doors and fired 14 shots into the lobby.

Hopkins had claimed he was suffering from exposure to Agent Orange, and he was facing trial when he died of an apparent overdose of alcohol and sleeping pills.

Attorney race
favors Reiner

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The two candidates for city attorney, Ira Reiner and Bob Ronka, are winding up a $1.75 million campaign that was marked in the last seven weeks by an absence of the public acrimony that characterized the primary campaign.

Reiner, 45, who is giving up his post as city controller to seek the attorney spot, is the apparent favorite in the race, garnering 49.6 percent of the vote — just short of the 50 percent plus one needed to win in the primary — compared to Ronka's 31.6 percent.

But Ronka, 38, a city council member, is hoping for a more conservative voter turnout Tuesday that could increase his chances for victory.

Nude child found dead

OAKLAND (AP) — The nude body of a 7-year-old child was discovered stuffed into a garbage can near his home and a 16-year-old neighbor was arrested for investigation in the case, police said.

Police, alerted at about noon Sunday, "thought they could detect a pulse" in Howard Verrine and rushed him to Providence Hospital, where he was pronounced dead 15 minutes after arrival, said Oakland Police homicide Sgt. Mike Sitterud.

The slaying was reported by a teen-age neighbor who gave a description of the killer that matched himself, Sitterud said.

Bomb rips BofA branch

BERKELEY (AP) — A bomb exploded at a Bank of America branch causing $3,000 to $7,000 in damage but injuring no one, a police spokesman said.

The blast ripped out several plate glass windows and a set of double doors at the rear of the building and damaged a drop ceiling inside at about 3:30 p.m. Sunday.

Scores flee USC fire

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A fire which began in a seventh-floor rubbish chute forced scores of University of Southern California students to evacuate an 11-story coed dormitory.

The Sunday fire apparently was not deliberately set, said the campus chief of security, Steven Ward. It reportedly did $95,000 damage to the Residence West dormitory and no one was injured.

Crash kills LA officer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A police officer was killed and another was hospitalized from injuries in a traffic collision between a patrol car and a pickup truck driven by an off-duty firefighter, North Hollywood division police officers reported.

The accident occurred at the intersection of Magnolia and Laurel Canyon Boulevards about 10:12 p.m. Sunday, said police Sgt. Barry Romano.

The driver of the patrol car, Steven Alberts, 29, a three-year veteran of the department, was pronounced dead on the scene.

Profits narrow for gas dealers

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Market pressures are forcing brand-name gasoline retailers to accept slimmer per-gallon profit margins despite higher prices at the pump, oil industry analyst Dan Lundberg says.

His weekly Lundberg Letter survey found that major brand-name dealers were clearing an average profit of 4.95 cents per gallon of regular gas, while non-major retailers enjoyed an average 5.25 cents per-gallon margin.

In the past, major brand-name dealers have always offset lower sales volumes with higher profit margins, Lundberg said.

The survey noted that profit margins for all retailers have decreased dramatically since May 1980, when the "major-brand margin average (self-service regular leaded) was 10.54 cents a gallon while the non-major margin average was 7.72 cents a gallon."

Development pressure hits old dump sites

Pressures to build on more Orange County lands create strange requests, and one of the latest involves the increased use of four county-run landfills.

When they were excavated, the landfills weren't considered by county officials as anything except repositories where recently generated trash would pile up. What was tossed in a garbage can one day would end up covered in a landfill a few days later.

But suddenly the Orange County Board of Supervisors is pressed to make new policy decisions on the landfills. The issue is whether material in former dumps should be moved in large quantity to the present landfills.

Developers want to erect buildings on some of the 90 identified former dump sites in the county. Before they do, however, they have to get rid of the uneven piles of garbage and refuse that are buried under the surfaces in order to reach a solid building base. They want to move the material to existing landfills.

Since the county doesn't charge for dumping fees at its landfills, its current facilities could get filled quickly — and at a high cost to taxpayers — if the practice is allowed.

The supervisors instead should institute suitable tonnage fees for high volume dumping. The fees should be high enough to pay for new landfills should existing ones fill prematurely.

A coastal victory

Gov. Jerry Brown won a small victory for California last week when a U.S. District judge responded to a suit filed by Brown and five state agencies by granting an injunction to halt the awarding of oil leases in 32 tracts in the Santa Maria Basin off San Luis Obispo County.

The suit charged that Secretary of Interior James Watt had violated several federal statutes, including the Coastal Zone Management Act, in agreeing to the leases without sufficient consultation with state authorities.

They were among several sales that had been rejected by former Secretary Cecil Andrus on grounds the oil potential was not sufficient to offset probable environmental and commercial damage to coastal areas.

Watt reversed the Andrus ruling after he assumed office this year.

The suit charges violation of a federal provision that federal offshore activities that directly affect a state's coastal zone must be consistent with the state's coastal management plan, in this case the California Coastal Act.

It did not challenge leasing in 79 other tracts in the initial auction. And the judge authorized opening of bids for the lease sales after federal attorneys said their decision to challenge the suit would depend upon whether or not bids were received for any of the disputed tracts. The state contends only 8 percent of the basin's estimated oil reserves are in these tracts.

Judge Marian Pfaelzer rightly noted that the cumulative impact on the state's coastal management program can most effectively be determined in the pre-leasing period.

Once tracts have been leased, each plan can only be challenged on its potential individual effect on the coast, without regard to other offshore oil activities.

Since Watt's blanket decision to open up offshore oil leasing along some of the most sensitive areas of the Central and Northern California coast was made without consultation with the state, the governor's suit is very much in order — and the judge's ruling may at least open the way for more state participation in leasing decisions.

Sacramento money tree

Up in Sacramento the right hand clearly doesn't know — or care — what the left hand is doing.

Senate and Assembly budget subcommittees have approved a budget for the state Legislature and its 2,000 employees of $101.6 million for the coming year. That's 27 percent higher than last year's budget and it's the first time the Legislature will cost taxpayers more than $100 million for a year's operations.

This doesn't include projected 6 percent pay raises that would bring the total to $105 million, or 31 percent above last year's figure.

Meanwhile, the Legislature's budget analyst, William Hamm, has prepared a "hit list" that shows how some $1.2 billion could be saved in state spending cuts.

His hits are listed as having "relatively little," "more significant" and "the greatest" adverse impact on state programs.

Hardest hit would be health and welfare, public schools and California colleges and universities.

Under Hamm's proposals, the biggest cut would be in the college and university systems — $305 million, of which some $200 million would have "greatest adverse impact." This would include student tuition charges.

Of a proposed $227 million cut for public schools, Hamm says $221 million would have "little" adverse impact since it would include $142 for deferred maintenance and $2.4 million formerly needed for busing in the Los Angeles school system.

A proposed $245 million cut in health and welfare programs would fall into Hamm's "greatest adverse impact" category.

But while Hamm is sharpening his red pencil, the lawmakers apparently have quite forgotten that Assembly Speaker Willie Brown earlier this month vowed the Legislature's budget would not grow by even as much as 20 percent.

Someone should introduce these public servants.

L.M. Boyd / Love and memory

"Man loves little and often, women much and rarely." A fellow named Basta said that. It is in our Love and War man's files next to the report that the average man falls in love five times, average woman twice. And there's a footnote: Men as they age tend to cut down in memory the number of their past loves, but women are inclined to recall them all and then some.

Consider this sign: "Ergophobia — Intensive Care Unit." That particular phobia word means not just a mild fear but a deep dread of any sort of work. On the door of which room in your house, if any, should it be posted?

The South African bird known as the hornbill seals his mate inside a hollow tree. Uses a mud cement. Leaves just enough opening to in with his bill. He doesn't chip out the crusty barrier to free her until the eggs hatch. This I've read repeatedly. Nowhere to be found, however, is any explanation of what happens to her if he gets killed while she's still walled up in there.

Soviets push 'Star Wars' race

WASHINGTON — The United States and Soviet Union are engaged in a deadly race to develop "Star Wars" weapons, like laser beams and man-made lightning bolts. The top-secret plans call for mounting them aboard future spaceships.

Indeed, the space shuttle Columbia may be the forerunner of future Galactica-like battleships that may cruise in space. But if the United States is ahead in developing a reusable spaceship, the Kremlin's scientists may have the edge in other crucial areas of research.

Now that the Soviet Union has apparently caught up in the sophistication of its strategic missiles, the Reagan administration is likely to decide that the United States should concentrate on keeping ahead in the field of laser technology. One intelligence expert, who attended a secret laser briefing called it "the hottest briefing in town."

WHAT MAKES these "directed energy" weapons so hot is that they are expected to make strategic missiles obsolete within the next 20 years. Laser beams can be thwarted by clouds and other atmospheric disturbances, but a similar ray gun called a "particle beam weapon" would be virtually unstoppable. Both super-powers are trying to perfect them.

"The Soviets have had a research program under way since 1970 aimed at developing lasers with weapons applications," reports a top-secret Central Intelligence Agency document. The CIA identified several possible Soviet laser ranges and one probable — at Golovino, about 100 miles east of Moscow. "It is similar in length and layout to U.S. high-energy laser test ranges," the CIA explained, adding:

"Similar U.S. programs suggest that the kinds of tests most likely energy laser (HEL) programs are roughly equal at the present time," the secret report says, "although the U.S. is believed to have an advantage in the pointing, tracking, optics and control technologies."

THE RUSSIANS appear to be ahead in short pulse lasers and electrical discharge lasers, which could be useful for military applications in the atmosphere.

As for the awesome particle-beam weapons, the report says the Soviet Union is believed to have had a research and development effort under way for possibly 20 years.

Charged particle beam devices, or CPBs, represent "a new phase in the historical development of technology," the study reports. When perfected, these controlled "lightning bolts" can solve a wide range of scientific and industrial problems, the report states.

But it adds ominously: "Soviet work (on CPBs) is strong in exactly those areas needed for weapons application — whereas U.S. work to date has not been pointed toward military applications."

The report continues: "It is believed that the Soviets are ahead of the U.S. in many other critical PBW technologies... and that the present Soviet level of effort should permit them to continue to advance in these technology areas at a rapid rate."

performed at these sites are those most suitable for ground or air-based defense, including air-to-air combat, although the results would also be useful for programs concerning anti-ballistic missile, anti-satellite or laser-guided munitions."

Who's ahead? An assessment of the U.S.-Soviet balance in laser and other directed-energy weapons is contained in a highly classified study conducted last year by the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. It was shown to my associate Dale Van Atta.

Sports scene short of real heroes

Is it me or are there a dull bunch of stars on the sports scene right now?

I'm not a big fight fan but I can't remember a time since I was 8 years old when I didn't know who the heavyweight boxing champion was, but I couldn't tell you who he or she is now. Someone says "Mike Weaver." Mike Weaver?

Who is the highest-paid player in baseball right now? Babe Ruth? Lou Gehrig? Mickey Mantle? Willie Mays? No. They don't play anymore. It's Dave Winfield. Tell me 10 things you know about Dave Winfield. He must be a wonderful baseball player but I don't know a single thing about him except that he makes more money than any of the others.

EACH OF US HAS to be careful about taking our sports heroes from a time in our past when sports heroes meant more to us than they do now and then sticking with them no matter who else comes along. I know that and I try to be careful not to do it, but no one can tell me that Joe Louis wouldn't have destroyed whoever the heavyweight boxing champion is now. I like swimming, too, and the national champion may be swimming 100 meters faster than Johnny Weissmuller swam 100 yards but whoever it is hasn't caught the popular imagination the way Weissmuller did.

Even the racehorses are dull. Every year at Kentucky Derby time I usually get interested and become familiar with the names of a few good horses. This year I'd heard of Cure The Blues and two or three others. Cure The Blues finished 15th in the Derby. Just give me a minute or two and maybe I'll think of the name of the winner. It wasn't Secretariat or Whirlaway, I'll tell you that.

Bruce Lietzke won the last big golf tournament I read about. I hesitate to knock someone I don't know, and Bruce may be a great golfer and a very nice person who's good to his mother, but he isn't Ben Hogan, Arnie Palmer or Jack Nicklaus.

IT'S HARD TO PUT your finger on what quality it is that attracts your attention to a sports figure but none of the golfers winning tournaments this year seem to have it. I watched Tom Watson win the Masters on television and he seems like an extraordinarily normal person without any falseness about him but he lacks those characteristics that attract a crowd. If you're not a golf nut, he doesn't interest you.

The tennis people are boring. Except for the bizarre revelation by Billie Jean King that she's had a homosexual relationship with another woman, both men's and women's professional tennis is thoroughly uninteresting. And I'm a sports nut, mind you. I read the sports pages first.

But do we really need another tennis tournament to prove that Martina Navratilova can beat Virginia Wade? Do 50 players have to spend another week in the sun to determine for the 100th time that both John McEnroe and Bjorn Borg can beat Vitas Gerulaitis and Guillermo Vilas? Borg is about as interesting as a panel discussion with the No. 3 and No. 4 men at the State Department for Latin American Affairs under Gerald Ford.

THE BOSTON CELTICS basketball team has one very interesting star, Larry Bird. He plays the game exceedingly well but the sad fact is that one of the things that makes him stand out as much as his excellence is his color. He's a blond white man in what has become essentially a black athlete's sport. Bird is articulate enough, but nowhere near as interesting or as bright as Arthur Ashe was as a black man in what has so far been almost exclusively a white man's sport, tennis. We're in sad shape when the color of an athlete is a matter of much interest.

Just to prove to you that I'm not a victim of my age as far as my opinion of sports stars go, I'll tell you I think Earl Campbell would have run circles around Red Grange and still got to the goal-line first.

Smart politics not always good government

How do you separate good government from smart politics? It's only a rhetorical question, because I don't think anybody has the answer, in our system, at least. We just go bumbling along, hoping for the best, and prepared for the worst, which we usually get.

What prompted this melancholy thought was a veto last year by Gov. Dreyfus of Wisconsin, which the

want to be told. The youths, for the most part, don't vote, the parents, for the most part, do. Ergo, when a governor or other elected official wants to ingratiate himself with the voters, he goes where the votes are.

This may be, as they say, smart politics. But it is rotten public administration. Its aim is not to get the kids off drugs, even though many of them want to, but to make the parents feel that the government is on their "side." Of course, this official attitude only further alienates the young people from the political and social establishment.

POLITICS IS a numbers game here, and little else. Is anyone naive enough to believe that any U.S. administration's heart would bleed for the Israelis if there were as many influential Arab votes here as there are Jewish ones? Or that any minority groups would be courted and then slighted so many times if they displayed really cohesive power at the polls?

Everyone seriously engaged in social work knows that the best way to administer a drug program is in confidentiality, so that young users can work their way out of the trap without shocking their parents and jeopardizing their precarious hold on family life. Almost nothing is gained, and a great deal may be lost, when parents are notified of this.

YET, THIS governor — and no doubt others like him — vetoes such a provision with the certain knowledge that he is mortally wounding the drug program where it is most needed, for no other real reason than to garner the support of the parents. On Election Day, this strategy will pay off; but every other day of the year, it consigns thousands of young people to the continuing peril of drug abuse. Why must our system make it so hard to be a good person and a good politician at the same time?

Fingerprints airtight case

Huntington detectives use irrefutable evidence from scene of the crime

By PHIL SNEIDERMAN
Of the Daily Pilot Staff

The unidentified burglar was dubbed "Fingers" by police detectives who found his prints on the windows of more than a dozen of the Huntington Beach homes he had invaded.

Finally, a patrol officer stopped a 15-year-old bicyclist who fit a rough description of the burglar. The youth was riding a stolen bicycle and carrying $230.

The teen's fingerprints were checked against a set compiled from burglary scenes by Steve Balloch and Kurt Kuhn, the Huntington Beach police identification specialists.

It was a perfect match. The prints tied "Fingers" to 17 burglaries, and he subsequently admitted to a dozen more. Police calculated "Fingers" was responsible for property losses of at least $25,000.

To Balloch and Kuhn, who spend long, often tedious hours studying the loops, whorls and arches left by fingers, palms and feet, there is a great satisfaction in making a solid link between a crime and a suspect.

"Fingerprints are a key in every case where you can get them," explains Kuhn. "They're the knock'em dead evidence."

When a case comes to trial, memories may be imperfect and psychologists may offer conflicting testimony, but fingerprint evidence is difficult to challenge.

"Fingerprint identification is an exact science, like mathematics," observes Kuhn. "We can go into court and say this print belongs to this person."

Such evidence can be found on an assortment of objects.

Balloch and Kuhn say they've been asked to collect prints from beer cans, pieces of paper, weapons, bricks, rocks, disarmed bombs and bomb fragments, drug packets — and even from a pair of shoes.

A silver or black powder is applied to a smooth surface that may have picked up a print. The powder brings up a print by sticking to oils or perspiration or grease deposited by the friction ridges of a person's skin.

The print can be photographed and enlarged or lifted with a special tape.

Police do not always collect a full, unsmudged print. Specialists like Balloch and Kuhn must decide whether enough distinguishing characteristics are present.

"It's possible to have a large portion of a fingerprint and still not have enough detail to make an identification," Balloch explains. "But in some cases, a partial print the size of a pencil eraser's head can be enough."

Prints taken from the scene of a crime can be checked against the 80,000 prints on file at the Huntington Beach police station. These files include crime suspects arrested in the city, plus residents whose fingerprints are required for security work or weapons permits.

In addition, Huntington Beach investigators have access to prints on file with neighboring police agencies and with state and federal justice officials.

But when a suspect has no fingerprints on file, the investigation can be hampered.

Balloch recalls a series of 30 to 40 related rapes in Huntington Beach during a three-year period. The suspect had left many prints when he broke into women's homes, but police were unable to match the prints to anyone on file.

Eventually, police arrested a man on a simple prowling charge after a woman complained he was peeking in her window. The prowler's prints matched those in the series of rapes, and eventually the man was convicted.

Some identification techniques can be learned through college classes and FBI schools. But the Huntington Beach specialists said much comes from experience.

Balloch is a sworn police officer, a 15-year veteran of the Huntington Beach force who moved from crime scene investigation to identification work.

Kuhn is a civilian technician who studied criminalistics and learned identification work with the Long Beach and Los Angeles police departments.

Towering penalty

Climbers still grounded at HB High

By PATRICK KENNEDY
Of the Daily Pilot Staff

Huntington Beach High School Principal Ann Chlebicki says she's holding firm on her decision to punish two student leaders who climbed the school's bell tower by removing them as masters of graduation ceremonies next week.

Johnnie Gonsalves, senior class president, and Shawn Mitchell, student body president, braced themselves between the school auditorium and the tower and pushed up to the first ledge of the structure and then climbed into a window on May 20.

They were spotted inside the tower by a school administrator with binoculars and were suspended for three days and removed as graduation officials.

Although the principal is remaining firm, Sandra Gonsalves says she's changed her mind about the controversy. She said she doesn't want her son to be reinstated as a graduation official because she thinks the punishment will teach him a valuable lesson.

Initially, Mrs. Gonsalves complained to district officials that the punishment was too harsh and constituted discrimination because her son is a student leader.

"Johnnie has a touch of the clown in him," his mother said today. "I still think the principal overreacted but this may teach Johnnie a lesson to be responsible that will help him later in life."

"He really wants to be up there (as a graduation official) but he'll be sitting in the stands knowing that he screwed up," Mrs. Gonsalves said.

Her son, however, said he feels the punishment is "too harsh."

"I think the suspension should have been enough," Johnnie said.

Shawn Mitchell, an experienced rock climber, also doesn't think the prank was a big deal. "I just like to climb," he said.

Principal Chlebicki said both boys will be allowed on the podium to accept their diplomas.

The school's tower, estimated to be 121 feet high, has been the center of past student pranks. One year seniors placed a giant truck tire innertube over the spire at the top of the tower.

Grooved columns were first step for Shawn Mitchell, top, and John Gonsalves on Huntington Beach High School bell tower.

Pair bound in Huntington store holdup

Huntington Beach police are looking for two men in their 20s who robbed a liquor store and tied up the clerk and a customer Saturday night.

Police said Heritage Liquor Store, on Edinger Avenue near Golden West Street, was robbed of $200 by the two suspects at 11 p.m. The suspects tied up the lone clerk in a back room and also took $50 from his wallet, police said.

A customer entered during the robbery and was robbed of his wristwatch, ring and $8 and then tied up, police said.

The suspects are described as male blacks. They had a handgun, police said.

Morning drizzle to continue

Clearing seen for afternoon; no heavy rain forecast

The National Weather Service is predicting more hazy sunshine with scattered drizzles Tuesday morning.

A weather service spokesman said high temperatures in Orange County are expected to be in the low 60s tonight and in the high 70s at the beaches Tuesday.

Some clearing can be expected in the afternoon, the spokesman said, and no heavy rain is predicted.

Lifeguard departments along the Orange Coast reported small to average crowds at the beaches over the weekend, with the overcast weather apparently keeping people away.

A Long Beach man and an El Toro man drowned in two separate diving accidents in Laguna Beach and Newport Beach Saturday.

Roger Lovejoy reportedly drowned while attempting to dive for a lost weight belt off Abalone Point, just south of El Morro Beach in Laguna at about 2:30 p.m.

Ivan Kowalchuk, 20, drowned while scuba diving with two friends off Corona del Mar Beach at 2:45 p.m. Saturday. He was pronounced dead on arrival at Hoag Memorial Hospital.

Lifeguard departments reported making several routine rescues over the weekend. Water temperature were reported to be a warm 66 degrees, and surf was reported running from 2 to 4 feet.

Rip currents plagued bathers at Aliso, Capistrano, Dana Point and Niguel State Park beaches over the weekend, according to Jim Stauffer of Lifeguard International. However, no major incidents were reported.

Crash victim identified

Fountain Valley police have identified a man killed Friday in a one-car accident as George Craig Moreno, 26, of Hawthorne. Moreno, of 13703 Lemoli Ave., was killed when his sports car struck a light pole at Euclid Street and Blue Allium Avenue and careened into a block wall at 11 p.m., police said. The victim was ejected from his car and died at the scene.

Police said they still are investigating the accident.

JUST COASTING

Wrath sweeps inland

CRYING FOUL & SUCH: Sometimes you may get the notion that the only voices of indignation and outrage over action of our wonderful state Coastal Commission are raised by residents of this best of all possible coasts. Not quite true, maybe. Oh, it is true that perhaps the loudest cries of foul come from the coastline as the Coastal Commission's social tinkers and bureaucratic functionaries pontificate on some of their more arbitrary and capricious dicta.

ONCE, FOR EXAMPLE, the coastal czars, in their infinite wisdom, granted a Newport Beach bank the right to build only after bank officials agreed to buy a small bus to transport visitors from its parking lot to the beach.

Another hotel upcoast got a permit to add rooms only after the commission ruled a certain number of rooms must be held open for less affluent beach visitors.

One notion of how cut-rate rooms would be allocated to the poor was by the zip code of their neighborhood. One of the zip codes thus anointed just happened to include the University of Southern California campus. Such weekend cut-rate fun.

THE EVER-BENEVOLENT commission was also poised to demand that some Malibu residents grant beach easements across their property after their homes burned down. In South Laguna, an easement was demanded through a residential carport parking area.

Indeed, the list seems endless. But again, most of the cries of foul and protests of private property confiscation have come from coastal people. And why not? You don't get too much demand for beach easements in Brea or La Habra.

TOM MURPHINE

La Habra welcoming committee for the coastal czars

BUT WAIT! We have another recent bit of Coastal Commission wonderfulness wherein the Lutheran Church of Half Moon Bay, upcoast in San Mateo County, has been blocked from building a new sanctuary.

Some coastal commission savants apparently believe the new church might block a small patch of ocean view from the coast highway.

The Lutherans, who have been attempting to build on the property they've owned since 1979, insist that any possible view of significance has already been blocked by other structures.

It sounds like an old, old story around these parts. Yet, from where does a strong voice of protest come? Why from the newspaper in Brea and La Habra, in our own inland Orange County.

Thus did the Daily Star Progress, serving those two communities fume, "Up until recently, there has been no agency of government, local, state or federal, that has dared tell Americans where they could or could not build a church.

"IF AGENCIES LIKE the Coastal Commission aren't abolished and legislators who promote such heinous agencies aren't defeated, we can all kiss our religious liberties goodbye.

"Agencies like the Coastal Commission collect the totalitarian mentality to work within its structure, like a dung heap collects flies.

"The stench of its most recent action should appall every Christian in America as well as every civilized person who believes in the sanctity of our Constitutional rights."

MY GOODNESS! Rather strong words heaped on the coastal commission brass from a place not even touched by the waters of the Pacific. The commission's popularity appears to be sweeping inland.

Or maybe the tide just came in.

Captured by convict, they think it's funny

ZEBULON, Ga. (AP) — Being victimized isn't always a frightening experience, claims Doug Williams, who says being tied hand and foot by an armed, escaped convict was a "pretty laughable situation."

The convict allegedly left Williams, his wife, Connie, and four other hostages tied to an overhead beam in a house Williams was remodeling. They started freeing themselves before the gunman even left.

"The whole thing was silly. I just wish we could have gotten a picture of the six of us in here tied up," Williams said. "It would have made a great little keepsake.

"It was crazy. By the time he had gotten started tying the third one, the first two of us had worked our hands free. He didn't notice though," Williams said. "It took an hour and a half to tie us all up. We were beginning to think he was never going to leave."

Billy G. Waters, 51, of suburban Atlanta, allegedly grabbed the gun of Columbus Correctional Institution guard James Holmes recently while Waters and three other inmates were working outside the prison grounds in Columbus, said state prisons spokeswoman Sara Engle.

Waters, serving 12 years for voluntary manslaughter, allegedly forced his three fellow inmates and the guard into a county truck and drove about 50 miles, where they abandoned the vehicle and marched through the woods until they got to Williams' house two days later, authorities said.

When Williams and his wife came home, the gunman and the others were waiting.

"I walked in the front door and there was Mr. Waters, standing at the base of the stairs with pistol pointed at me. It was like scenes from a silly movie," Williams said in an interview with The Columbus Enquirer.

PRISON AID — Chief Justice Warren Burger says that, despite a tight federal budget, the nation should establish an academy for prison guards and provide mandatory educational and vocational programs for inmates.

Veterans probing pesticide

RUTLAND, Vt. (AP) — In a move they are calling "Operation Peace of Mind," some local Vietnam veterans are programming a computer to determine the chances that they and other vets were exposed to the herbicide Agent Orange.

The program being put together by the Rutland chapter of the Vietnam Veterans of America also should be able to determine whether veterans were in the paths of two other herbicides used by the U.S. Army, Agent White and Agent Blue.

Dropping of state no excuse

DENVER (AP) — A judge here has ruled that drunken-driving charges no longer will be dismissed simply because the court summons fails to include the word "Colorado" next to the word "Denver."

In her ruling, U.S. District Judge Susan Barnes was responding to a case earlier this year when a Denver county judge dismissed a drunken-driving charge against Marilyn Northcutt on that technicality.

Farmers to help needy

GLASGOW, Scotland (AP) — The head of Britain's National Farmers' Union has said it is time to devote more attention to the underprivileged of the world.

"It is time we looked more closely at ways in which we can help feed those who are in a worse position," Richard Butler told a convention of agricultural writers.

"In the long term, ways of increasing the efficiency of agriculture all over the globe, by advice and help, will provide a lasting answer."

Most blacks in South

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite decades of migration to the North and West, more than half of America's blacks still live in the South, the Census Bureau has reported.

In a study released recently, the bureau said 53 percent of black Americans were in the South. It added that during the 1970s about as many blacks moved to the South as left the region. New York had at least 2,401,842 black residents, the most in the nation. California was second, with 1,819,220 and Texas third with 1,710,250.

Daughter is obstinate

She refuses mother's plea to visit crippled father

DEAR ANN LANDERS: My husband recently had a severe stroke. He is paralyzed on his right side. His speech is slurred but comprehensible.

Our happily married daughter has two children and lives in Baltimore. I have pleaded with her to come and see her father, but she refuses. She says she can't face the fact that he is crippled and will never be the same daddy she used to know. Her dread is understandable, but her obstinacy is killing me.

I offered to pay her plane fare (we live in California and it is an expensive trip), but it didn't change her mind. I know she really loves her father, and he is crazy about her.

Please tell me if I should stop begging her to make the trip. Also, is she wrong for refusing to come? I will be watching and waiting for your answer. — HEARTBROKEN MOTHER

Dear Mother: This isn't a matter of "right" or "wrong." It's a matter of emotional maturity.

I hope your daughter gets some counseling immediately. She needs to become adult enough to accept her handicapped father as he is. If she is unable to deal with this situation during his lifetime, she will carry a load of guilt to her grave.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I have you to thank for helping make my life miserable. My husband and I are getting on in years. We both read your column, and once or twice you have said, "If you don't use it, you'll lose it."

Well, my husband thinks you are talking directly to him. Even though he is less and less able to perform sexually (in fact, he is darn near impotent), sex is all he thinks about. I really do enjoy it now and then (once a month is okay), but I could live without it, too.

I do everything I can think of to discourage him. At bedtime I find things to do, such as washing clothes, cleaning closets, or mopping the floors. Usually he falls asleep. But if he wakes up in the middle of the night, he won't leave me alone until we start something. More

Dear Tied: Sounds like a ma-and-pa laundry . . . you are spending your evening hours at the tub and he's folding.

The challenge is to bring some starch to the scene. Your sad-in-the-sack husband should see the family doctor. There are ways to fortify the body to match a willing spirit.

It's more than likely that bedtime would be a less dread time if you didn't wear yourself out with all those domestic chores. (What do you do during the day?) A well-rested and eager partner could be a partial solution to the problem.

And since your husband lives by mottos, he should try this one for size: "Don't abuse it . . . just renew it."

DEAR ANN LANDERS: My sister-in-law has a parrot that talks a blue streak. She swears "Clattertrap" knows what he is saying because he responds to questions and calls people by name. I say this is not possible. Please settle it once and for all. — SAN JUAN

Dear San: Talking birds are imitators. There is no creative thinking going on in their feathered heads.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Relative makes proposal for new project. Be open-minded, not gullible. Emphasis on independence, originality and stimulation provided by romantic interlude. Focus also on trips, correspondence, special reports.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Evaluation of assets shows you are in better financial position than originally anticipated. Protect valuables, improve security measures. Hunch pays dividends. You recoup loss and regain sense of direction.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Popularity is on upswing; judgment, intuition and timing hit mark. Another Gemini and a Sagittarian play important roles. Accept invitation to social event. You are due to meet people who aid your cause.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Face truth as it exists, not merely as you wish it might be. You encounter individual who aids in rebuilding structure which had "decayed" as result of neglect. Aquarius, Scorpio, Leo natives figure prominently.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Ability to be analytical surges to forefront. Don't be satisfied to know something merely happened — find reasons, detect motives. Member of opposite sex figures prominently. Additional funds will be made available for business or career project.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Differentiate between false and sincere flattery. Surprise gift could be on agenda. Emphasis also on home, family and important domestic adjustment. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio natives play significant roles. Turn on charm.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Long-distance call creates aura of excitement. Accent on comby the American Cancer Society's Orange County unit, will meet at 7 p.m. Tuesday in Newport Beach. For information, call 752-8600.

PACIFICA COMMUNITY HOSPITAL in Huntington Beach will present a 10-hour course on diabetes and their family members beginning Wednesday at 7 p.m. For information, call 842-0611, ext. 350.

WOMEN'S HEALTH FAIR featuring 38 displays will be held from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday at Saddleback College. Co-sponsored by Hoag Memorial Hospital, the event includes information on drug abuse, domestic violence, burglary prevention, rape, smoking, venereal disease, nutrition, skin care, plastic surgery and toy safety. For information, call 645-8600, ext. 2285.

TEACHINGS of Vernon Howard, inner healing specialist, will be discussed at 10:30 a.m. Saturday in Newport Beach. For information, call (213) 936-9176.

NATURAL FAMILY PLANNING will be the subject of a two-part lecture series sponsored by St. Joseph Hospital beginning next Monday at 7:30 p.m. in Orange. For information, call 633-9111, ext. 7881.

munication, education, publication and acute perceptiveness. Define meanings, see places and people as they are, not merely as you wish they might exist. Watch Pisces!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Emphasis on money, investments, financial security and credit ratings. Cancer, Pisces and another Scorpio figure prominently. Older individual becomes valuable ally. Timing is essential to progress. Check with Capricorn!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You strike chord of universal appeal. People are drawn to you with their problems. Don't neglect your own needs — it is time to be "creatively selfish." Aries, Leo, Libra natives play important roles. Finish!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Let go of "technique" which creates friction, delay and ultimate loss. Strive for fresh procedures, encourage new contacts and renovate personal surroundings. You'll gain greater degree of independence. Watch Leo!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Good lunar aspect coincides with romance, creativity, special relationships with children and speculative ventures. In games of chance, stick with the numbers 2, 11 and 20. Another Aquarian plays significant role.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Focus on important details, correction of past errors and willingness to review and revise material. Improve security measures. Remove safety hazards from home. Make intelligent concession to older family member.

Construction fair set

The Orange County Chapter of The National Association of Women in Construction will sponsor its annual Dream House Contest Friday through Sunday. The location is the Huntington Center, Beach Boulevard and Edinger Avenue, Huntington Beach.

The participants in the Dream Home Contest are local junior high school students who compete for awards with their own architectural plans and scale models of their "dream home."

This course on Construction Technology is offered within the school districts as an elective to seventh and eighth graders. Judging of the models will occur Friday and awards will be presented at noon Saturday.

In conjunction with the Dream Home Contest will be a "Construction Opportunity Fair." Representatives of the various construction trades and unions will be present with literature, slides, and answers to employment questions and opportunities in this field.

Aspirin can 'spoil'

DEAR PAT DUNN: I always buy the largest bottle of aspirin I can find. A friend noticed my huge supply, and told me I probably have "spoiled" aspirin if the contents are more than a month or so old. Is this true?

W.H., Costa Mesa
Aspirin does begin to lose its quality after the seal on the bottle is broken. A sharp, vinegar-like odor, noticeable when the cap is removed, is the best indicator that the tablets are decomposing into irritating chemicals.

Another sign of advanced spoilage is gray, mottled patches on the surface of aspirin tablets. Fragments of loose powder and chipped or broken tablets also can indicate chemical instability. Always remove the cotton from an aspirin bottle when it is opened. If left in, it can collect moisture and accelerate spoilage.

Auto ripoffs told

DEAR PAT DUNN: Do you know of any common ripoff methods car dealers use to get a new car buyer to pay more than he should? I'm in the market for a new car, but don't want to get had.

K.L., Huntington Beach
Low-balling may be illegal, but it's not uncommon. The salesperson quotes one price, but puts another on the contract and usually tells you at the last minute that the sales manager won't allow it. High-balling also occurs in new car sales. This involves quoting a high trade-in price and when you agree to the deal, you're told the sales manager won't go for it.

Another illegal trick is "bait and switch" advertising. The advertising special may not be what you want or what you thought it was from the ad, so the salesperson immediately steers you to a higher-priced car that can be purchased immediately.

Some dealers pad the sales price by adding last minute unexpected costs. Undercoating and a "special" paint job are extras commonly suggested. If this happens, ask to see the dealer's preparation checklist because these services may already have been performed.

"Bushing" is another technique where the dealer raises the price after you have made a deposit or lowers the agreed upon trade-in offer.

Whenever a car salesperson makes a "good deal" offer, get it in writing. If this isn't agreeable, look elsewhere.

Mrs. Bush likes 'back to basics'

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — It was back to basics when Barbara Bush, the wife of Vice President George Bush, visited the Fittler Academics Plus School here where 450 inner-city students get old-style discipline and instruction.

Mrs. Bush found that at Fittler, homework must be signed by parents, minimum grades are required for promotion and jeans and T-shirts are banned under strict dress codes.

"If you can't read, you just can't go on," Mrs. Bush said during her tour. "At this school, they're seeing to it that they are learning reading and math."

Mrs. Bush said her trip was not official, but said she hoped to use her position in the public eye to promote parental volunteerism in schools and try to eradicate illiteracy in the United States.

The school is so popular that 1,600 parents have added their names to a waiting list to enroll their children in grades 1-8.

Summer courses offered

Registration for more than 550 courses offered at Orange Coast College this summer begins June 8.

The summer session runs June 15 through Aug. 7 with registration by appointment set between June 8 and 11 in the Admissions Office.

Walk-in registration without appointment will be conducted June 11, 5-7 p.m., and June 12, 8:30 a.m. to 2 p.m., continuing June 15 and 16 between 8:30 a.m. and 7 p.m.

Petroleum class taps well of knowledge

EDITOR'S NOTE — School days, school days, dear old gushing oil well days. In oil country in Western Pennsylvania, the training starts early. One high school offers half a day of on-the-job training as part of its regular school program.

By JOHN BRONSON

BRADFORD, Pa. (AP) — Dave Faller stands in yellow mud up to his ankles, his workboots squishing in the mush as he and several other high school students wrestle with a three-foot-long oil rig wrench.

As a diesel-powered winch sputters, then roars in the background, the students unscrew a grease-slicked pipe and lay it with a hollow thud on a pile of other tubing taken out of the well.

"THIS IS JUST like working in a regular oil field," the 17-year-old senior says. "When the wells don't pump, we pull 'em up to see what's wrong."

Faller is one of 40 students enrolled in Bradford Area High School's unusual petroleum production course — one of two such high school programs in the United States. The other is in Wayne County, Ohio.

Bradford's students get on-the-job training for half the school day. The rest of the school day is spent in regular classes.

At graduation, the students are qualified as "knowledgeable learners" for oil field jobs that start at $17,000 a year, says Myron Crumrine, supervisor of vocational education.

So far, about two-thirds of those who entered the five-year-old program have become "roustabouts" as oil field workers are called.

BRADFORD HIGH School has oil, gas and mineral rights on 25 acres of land, where the training takes place, and owns eight acres outright.

Ten pumping jacks, resembling giant metal insects, peck at the ground on the wooded hillside behind the football stadium. Last year they sucked out 440 barrels of crude from sandstone formations about 1,300 feet below the ground. The school sold the oil for $16,000.

"Not too many school programs bring in that kind of money," says Crumrine.

THE PROGRAM was launched in 1976 after Crumrine surveyed the job market for oil field workers at the request of the Pennsylvania Oil, Gas and Mineral Association.

"The oil industry has existed here for over 100 years, but the skills involved are passed on by word-of-mouth. There has never been a formal training program," he says.

Crumrine found a big shortage

of trained workers.

"They lost a generation of workers," he says, explaining that the labor force waned during the years when crude oil prices were depressed.

THE ARAB OIL embargo changed all that, and petroleum producers found themselves lacking a skilled labor pool.

"Companies told us all kinds of horror stories," says Bradford, Director of Curriculum Ed Goulding, who was high school principal when the petroleum course was created.

"Some workers couldn't find the wells they were supposed to pump. Others didn't know one end of a wrench from another. And the older guys who could pass the knowledge along were retiring," he says.

To close that gap, Crumrine and an advisory group developed the curriculum for the petroleum production course.

WITH FUNDS from the Pennsylvania Bureau of Vocational Education Department, the school was able to purchase the land and mineral rights for about $40,000.

A federal Appalachia grant was received to drill new oil wells and local oil companies — Quaker State, Pennzoil and Kendall — supplied pipe, rods, tanks and other equipment.

Goulding says the initial outlay for land and mineral rights is now made.

And the course has hit the mark as far as producers are concerned.

"It's very effective. We're just tickled with it," says E. James Bryner, president of the Pennsylvania Oil, Gas and Mineral Association. The association represents 1,000 companies, primarily small oil and gas producers.

"WE ARE NOT only supplying our own local industry, but we're having calls from as far away as Louisiana for workers on offshore oil rigs," he says.

The students say the course can be physically as well as intellectually demanding.

Among the skills taught are tool recognition and usage, oil well servicing and plugging, pumping jack maintenance, bulldozer operations, welding, carpentry and oil field mechanics.

"These kids also can get pretty wet, cold and muddy," Goulding says, adding that students encounter the problems and satisfactions of a "real world" working day.

THE COURSE has no trouble attracting applicants.

Selection is based on results of the Armed Forces battery of tests, aptitude examinations and the student's past academic and attendance records.

This year, there were 17 openings and 27 applicants from the school of 900 students, Crumrine says.

"We're in oil country and this will give me a good chance of getting a job," says Jerry Pehonsky, 16, wearing a scuffed yellow hardhat and grease-stained coveralls.

"Besides, I like being outside. This kind of work is a lot better than being in a factory," he says.

INSTRUCTOR Ken Hultberg, who has 10 years of oil field experience, says students leave the course with about 1,600 hours of "hands-on training."

"These kids are here because they want to be and they take it seriously," Hultberg says.

"They get a chance to run a lot of equipment and realize that if there's a foulup, that's it. When they get around the machinery they seem to grow up. They act a little older," he adds.

IT ALSO OFFERS more tangible benefits than usual school report card, Crumrine says.

"The students like to see the tanks filled and they love to see the check come in," he says.

LOS ANGELES (AP)

For the second year in a row, the Los Angeles County Grand Jury's jails committee has called conditions at the police department's Parker Center Jail "crowded, unsanitary and inhumane" in a report.

In a response read this week by an assistant, Police Chief Daryl Gates said: "I want the jails to be clean and sanitary, but I do not want them to be comfortable. I want them to be human, but not a nice place to be. I'd just as soon an inmate not view it as such a nice place that he wants to come back."

LAPD spokesman Cmdr. William Booth said the county health department had inspected the jail facility and found it to be healthy. He also said that the chief denied the grand jury's allegation that the police department had a "cavalier attitude" about the grand jury's recommendations.

Crime bills praised

SACRAMENTO (AP)

The bipartisan leaders of the Senate Judiciary Committee, which has passed 73 crime bills this year, says it has done good work.

But a self-styled law-and-order group, the Law and Order Campaign Committee, says it is getting ready to circulate an even stiffer anti-crime initiative containing about 10 measures.

The executive director of Law and Order, John Feliz, told reporters that petitions for the proposed 1982 ballot measure should be ready for circulation around June 15.

"We feel already that the liberal leadership has weakened the bills," said Feliz.

Pleasure trip turns tragic as 9 perish

HONOLULU (AP) — It was supposed to have been a two-hour, 23-mile pleasure cruise on a 20-foot cabin cruiser for 21 residents of the sparsely populated island nation of Kiribati.

Two months and 1,300 miles later, nine were dead and the other 12 had survived only by drinking rainwater or sea water and eating fish — including a shark — that they had caught with their bare hands.

The survivors were reported in good condition Sunday at a hospital on Moen Island in the Truk District of the U.S. Trust Territory of the Pacific. A hospital nurse said all 12 — including a 3-year-old boy — probably would be released and flown home in about a week.

The islanders had drifted helplessly in the Pacific Ocean for 60 days until they were spotted Friday by the helicopter of a San Diego-based tuna boat about 700 miles southeast of Guam.

Their cramped cabin cruiser left Abaiang Island the morning of March 26 to bring the people to Tarawa, the capital of Kiribati, formerly known as the Gilbert Islands.

"A good term to describe the boat would be overcrowded," said Quartermaster Mike McKiernan, a Coast Guard spokesman on Guam.

But Cinrata Teaanene, a police constable on Tarawa, said it is not unusual for ships on short trips in Kiribati to be crowded because there is a shortage of boats in the poor island nation.

Most of the people on board for the two-hour trip were headed to Tarawa for a vacation, Teaanene said. The rest were bringing food to a market there.

But at one point the ship's only engine failed and the boat began drifting to the west, McKiernan said. As prevailing currents carried the boat through an area of few landfalls, the islanders lived on the goods that were being taken to the market.

The supply of fresh water lasted about four days; the food about two weeks, which was just about as long as the Kiribati Marine Guard hunted for the missing ship.

After that, funeral services were held for many of the missing.

"We searched, but we didn't know where to look," Teaanene said. "I think all the people thought they were dead, but hoped they were alive."

Once the initial supplies ran out, those on the ship survived by catching rainwater and fish with their bare hands, said Coast Guard spokesman Keith Spangler in Honolulu. He said their last fish, a shark, was caught two weeks ago.

"Each rainfall would provide enough water for about three or four days," he said. When no rain fell, the islanders drank sea water.

The Coast Guard has not yet been able to determine when people began dying on board the ship.

"That's something we're hoping to hear from the officials on Truk on Monday," McKiernan said Sunday. He said officials believe the bodies of the dead were buried at sea one by one.

High court overrules nude dancing ban

Use of zoning powers violates constitutional rights of freedom of speech

WASHINGTON (AP) — Local governments cannot use their zoning powers to ban all live nude dancing, the Supreme Court ruled today.

By a 7-2 vote, the justices said such a comprehensive ban violates constitutional rights to freedom of speech and expression.

Today's case involved Mt. Ephraim, N.J., which banned within its boundaries all nude dancing and all other forms of live entertainment.

"In this case, Mt. Ephraim has not adequately justified its substantial restriction of protected activity. None of the justifications asserted in this court was articulated by the state courts and none of them withstands scrutiny," Justice Byron R. White said in an opinion for the majority.

White continued that it did not "appear that Mt. Ephraim's zoning authority has arrived at a defensible conclusion that unusual problems are presented by live entertainment."

In today's case, the high court overturned the 1978 convictions of James F. Schad and Juliette Ann DiLuciano on charges of offering live nude dancing as a form of entertainment at an establishment known as Six

Thirteen. Each had been fined $300.

In other action today, the high court:

— Agreed to decide whether California or Texas gets to tax the Howard Hughes estate, valued at up to $1.1 billion. The high court must determine which state was Hughes' chief residence when he died April 5, 1976.

— Blocked again the release of secret computer tapes that the government says could show tax cheaters how to avoid getting caught. The high court granted the government's request for a postponement of an appeals court order to turn the Internal Revenue Service material over to a Bellevue, Wash., couple.

— Agreed to decide whether Minnesota officials can scrutinize financial operations of the Rev. Sun Myung Moon's Unification Church. The justices will review a ruling that the state's strict financial reporting and disclosure requirements for religious groups like the Unification Church are unconstitutional.

Jury analyzes housing woes

By GLENN SCOTT
Of the Daily Pilot Staff

More investment money and less speculation were prescribed today by the Orange County Grand Jury to remedy the county's affordable housing woes.

But in their diagnosis of a complex problem, grand jury members were hesitant to claim that any practical solution is available to help more residents afford their own homes.

"Given the realities of land costs, financing costs, labor and material costs, plus delays, affordable housing is an elusive goal," grand jury members concluded in their 13-page report.

It is the fifth report issued by the busy grand jury in the last 15 days. The 19-member group has issued 13 reports since last July.

Among recommendations for the County Board of Supervisors was that more mortgage money needs to be created through investments, more rental housing should be built and that administrators of affordable housing programs must get tougher to curb speculation.

Grand jury members said state legislation could be created to give private investors the privilege of selling bonds for affordable housing mortgages under the same tax exempt status as governments have.

Members said owners of businesses and industries also could get tax incentives to finance or build housing for their employees.

The grand jury objected to the fact that buyers of affordable units can own other property, under guidelines of the Orange County inclusionary housing program.

They added that the county

Father held in try to sell infant girl

Orange County Sheriff's deputies have taken a 6-week-old baby girl into protective custody after her father allegedly tried to sell her to Mission Viejo restaurant patrons early today.

Sheriff's spokesman Lt. Wyatt Hart said the infant was taken to the Albert Sitton Home in Orange. She was found to be in good health, Hart said.

Hart said sheriff's deputies were called to the restaurant near the San Diego Freeway and Crown Valley Parkway in Mission Viejo at about 1 a.m.

Hart said a group of customers at the restaurant told investigators that Randy Gorden Wilson, 29, at first offered to sell his baby daughter, and then tried to give her away.

Wilson, who Hart said has no permanent address, was taken into custody at the scene and later booked for cruelty to a child. Hart said he is now held at Orange County jail in lieu of $5,000 bail.

Sheriff's deputies are searching for the child's mother, who they said they believe is a 15-year-old juvenile. Hart said they do not know the child's name, and are calling her "Baby Wilson."

Blood coats Beirut beaches

Syria soldiers, Christian militia kill civilians

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syrian soldiers and Christian militiamen rocketed, shelled and sniped at each other today in a second straight day of fighting that left at least 23 civilians dead and 276 injured, many of them on Beirut's beaches, police said.

A police spokesman said the Lebanese capital's Mediterranean shores, jammed with bathers, were a major target for the gunners Sunday. It was the first time the beaches had been shelled since the nation's 1975-76 civil war, and Beirut newspapers called the bombardment the "beach war."

Exchanges of artillery, rocket and gunfire between Moslem and Christian sectors of the Lebanese capital began late Saturday. They reached a crescendo at midafternoon Sunday and subsided to sporadic sniping at sundown.

But by midday today, the boom of heavy artillery had returned, and fires were burning in several residential neighborhoods. The Christian "Voice of Lebanon" radio said three Christian children, a 2-year-old boy and two sisters aged 3½ and 4½, were killed when a shell slammed into their home.

The casualties pushed the Lebanese toll to more than 550 dead since April 1.

Sniping and artillery duels also were reported in the Christian city of Zahle, 30 miles to the east in the Bekaa Valley, where a Christian attempt to open a military supply road ignited the Syrian-Christian fighting at the start of April and led to Syria's deployment of Soviet-made SAM-6 missiles.

As U.S. envoy Philip Habib prepared to return to the Middle East to try again to resolve the Syrian-Israeli dispute over the missiles, Syria's foreign minister reiterated his government's refusal to remove them from Lebanon, and the leader of the Lebanese Christians fighting the Syrians said war is imminent.

Israel is threatening to attack the missiles unless they are withdrawn. Syria refuses to take them out, and the dispute threatens to touch off a new Arab-Israeli war.

The SAMs "are there to stay. They will not be withdrawn," declared Foreign Minister Abdul Halim Khaddam.

2 aliens in fight; one dead

Santa Ana police investigators are searching today for a man who witnesses said shot and killed another man in what a detective called "basically a macho type situation."

Dead is Manuel Barrasa, 23, a laborer who lived in a Myrtle Street apartment complex. Police said they are searching for Sirilo Venegas, another laborer who lived nearby and allegedly fled in his car after the shooting.

Both men were from Mexico and had entered the United States illegally, said investigator Perrell Buckles.

He said several witnesses said the suspect, who allegedly was in a bad mood from another argument, started "bad-mouthing" Barrasa and some friends early Sunday morning.

Witnesses said the suspect pulled a knife on Barrasa, but when the victim came up with his own knife, the suspect left and returned with an automatic pistol, Buckles said.

Barrasa then was shot after he was challenged, the detective said. Barrasa was pronounced dead at the scene at 4:20 a.m. by paramedics, he said.

spotted the cabin cruiser, using several bedsheets as a makeshift sail, in waters north of Truk. Helicopters are often used by large fishing vessels to search for schools of fish from the air, McKiernan said.

The survivors were picked up by the fishing boat, transferred to a Trust Territory field ship and brought to Moen, McKiernan said.

A hospital nurse said the survivors, were suffering from varying degrees of malnutrition and exposure, but were in "good shape, considering everything."

Crash victims recovered off Catalina

AVALON (AP) — A mini-submarine has recovered the bodies of two of the three people believed to have been in a light aircraft that crashed into the waters off Catalina Island three days earlier.

The sub, owned by Undersea Graphics, of Torrance, was successful in locating the plane on Sunday at a depth of 260 feet, beyond where deep sea divers had been able to search, according to the Sheriff's Department.

The bodies, a male and a female, were not immediately identified, said Deputy John Radeliff. They were found clear of the wreckage of the twin-engine plane in which three people were believed to be flying when it left Avalon, then went down, exploding as it hit the water.

No plans have been disclosed yet regarding a search for the third person, and the "possibility of a fourth" person aboard is still unconfirmed, said Radeliff.

The Federal Aviation Administration called in the mini-sub company after divers failed to find the wreckage or the victims because of the depth of the water. The three people believed to be aboard the plane were: pilot Steven Stonerod of Tulare; Gary Lourenco of Tulare; and Colleen Knight of Visalia.

Body on sand identified

A body that washed up on Bolsa Chica State Beach in Huntington Beach Friday evening has been identified as Timothy Ellis Lambeth, 18, of Gila, N.M., according to an Orange County Sheriff's spokesman.

Lambeth had been reported missing after going in the surf on May 18 at Huntington Beach.

His body was discovered on the beach near Golden West Street at 6:45 p.m.

should control cases where speculators sign agreements to own and occupy a unit, then rent it anyway.

Members also objected to a procedure where builders can trade or sell credits to build affordable units. "These credits have no value limit and are worth whatever the market for them will allow," members said in the report.

Under the county's affordable housing program, builders are required to include so-called affordable units in 25 percent of all developments of five or more units. The units must be priced so lenders will qualify buyers who make up to 120 percent of the county's median income.

The median currently is about $24,500 a year, according to the grand jury.

F.W. Olson, manager of the county's Information and Housing Development Office, said today that county procedures do control most of the grand jury's concerns.

Olson said some buyers coming from outside Southern California couldn't make a down payment without using other property as equity, although he added: "Obviously we're concerned if somebody walks in and already has a home."

He also added that allowing builders to barter credits for affordable units hasn't proved to be a problem, let alone an abuse. He said the practice gives builders flexibility to design smaller developments without rigid requirements.

More banks slash prime to 20 percent

NEW YORK (AP) — More major banks cut their prime lending rates to 20 percent today, and a smaller bank in St. Louis cut its rate even further amid talk that interest rates may have peaked.

Continental Illinois National Bank of Chicago and Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. of New York announced the cuts to 20 percent from 20.5 percent, matching a reduction made Thursday by Chase Manhattan Bank of New York and a few smaller banks. Other major banks were expected to follow.

In St. Louis, Southwest Bank cut its prime rate to 19.5 percent. The prime is the base rate charged by banks on loans to commercial and industrial customers.

The widespread feeling that rates may decline was aided by the report by the Federal Reserve Board late Friday that the nation's basic money supply fell for the second straight week.

"I feel interest rates have peaked and that we are probably in the process of a sustained decline," said Robert Schwartz, senior financial economist at Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc., the nation's largest investment firm, following that report.

Countian held in dad's slaying

Hatchet, butcher knife used in Anaheim attack; police seeking motive

An Anaheim man was jailed Sunday after police said he confessed to killing his father with a hatchet and butcher knife.

Charles Thomas Hudec, 25, was being held today in the Anaheim City Jail on $250,000 bail in connection with the death of his father, Frank Hudec, 62.

Both lived at 2424 E. Tryon Ave. in Anaheim.

Investigators said today they haven't determined why the son allegedly attacked his father in their home, then stopped an officer in a patrol car about 3 a.m. to allegedly confess to the incident.

When police Sgt. Jack Parra and other officers reached the locked house, they heard a cry for help through a bedroom window, said Officer Dennis Sair.

The officers broke into the home and found the father on the bedroom floor with several stab and chop wounds, he said.

The father was taken to the UC Irvine Medical Center in Orange but died in surgery, Sair said.

A knife and hatchet believed to be used in the attack were found at the house, he said.

An investigator said Charles Hudec probably will be arraigned Tuesday in Municipal Court on murder charges.

Youths clash with troops on West Bank

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Rock-throwing Palestinian youths clashed with Israeli troops in Nablus and Ramallah on the occupied West Bank today, Israel Radio reported. The demonstrations came a day before the first anniversary of car bombings that maimed the mayors of the two towns.

Troops used tear gas against students demonstrating at Al Najah college in Nablus, the main West Bank town, Israel Radio said.

It said that in Ramallah to the south, youths blocked the streets with burning tires, threw rocks, waved the Palestinian flag and demanded an end to Jewish settlement in the West Bank, seized by Israel from Jordan in the 1967 Mideast war.

The bomb attacks on June 2, 1980 are widely believed to have been the work of Jewish terrorists, but no arrests have been made. The bombings seriously wounded mayors Bassam Shakaa of Nablus, who lost both legs at the knees, and Karim

Khalaf, who lost part of his left foot and suffered other injuries. The two men were among the most vocal radical spokesmen in the West Bank.

Earlier, the Israeli military command announced a military court on Sunday jailed five Arabs, from the Israeli occupied

Golan Heights, for three months without trial on charges of inciting fellow Arabs to oppose Israeli rule.

The announcement aroused protests today among some of the area's 15,000-strong Druse residents in the Golan Heights, which Israel seized from Syria in the 1967 Mideast War.

NUDITY RULING MADE BY HIGH COURT

ernment lawyers had noted that the disputed regulations already have been discarded.

Ruled that penniless men trying to fend off paternity suits sometimes can force states to pay for blood-grouping tests. The justices unanimously struck down an unconstitutional Connecticut's policy of not providing such free tests when paternity defendants could not afford them.

In the nude dancing case, New Jersey appeals courts upheld the convictions and the borough's zoning ordinance as applied to Six Thirteen. The State Supreme Court refused to review the case last Jan. 18.

Refused to halt an antitrust suit aimed at an international uranium cartel.

In asking for the rarely granted order, Gulf Oil Corp. and Gulf Minerals Canada Ltd., two of the defendants in the suit, claimed that the cartel is shielded from U.S. courts' scrutiny because its actions were "mandated" by the countries involved — Canada, France, South Africa and Australia.

Agreed to decide whether local governments can enact wide ranging regulations of stores selling drug paraphernalia.

Drug paraphernalia laws have been passed in various forms nationwide in an attempt to cut down the number of "head shops" and to curb abuse of marijuana and other drugs.

Today's case involved the Village of Hoffman Estates, Ill., which enacted the regulations on Feb. 20, 1978.

Unlike many of the ordinances enacted in other cities and towns, the Hoffman Estates law only licenses and regulates the sales of drug paraphernalia and does not criminalize the use or possession of such items.

Agreed to decide whether states may ban certain truthful language from lawyer advertisements.

The justices said they will study a constitutional challenge to a Missouri Supreme Court rule banning certain language from all lawyer ads.

Today's action marks the first time the nation's highest court has agreed to study fully a decision that struck down the legal profession's longtime ban on lawyer advertising as an unconstitutional infringement on free speech.

That 1977 rule left it to the states to regulate the manner, time and place of lawyer advertising. And in the past four years, the Supreme Court has refused to reopen its study of the issue.

The case granted review Monday stems from disciplinary action taken against Richard M. Jacobs, a Clayton, Mo., lawyer, who sent out in a mailing an announcement of the opening of his office.

Hearing Tuesday on cable TV rate hike

By STEVE MITCHELL

Of the Daily Pilot Staff

Operators of Storer Cable TV will return to Laguna Beach city council chambers Tuesday night to again push for a rate increase for its Art Colony customers.

The cable firm is seeking an increase from $7.50 per month to $8.50 for its Laguna Beach viewers, and from $2 to $2.50 for additional home outlets.

But council members told the firm three months ago they want more information before considering a rate increase. A public hearing Tuesday is scheduled to hear the results of the council's request.

And while the firm has prepared a report outlining the council's concerns, city officials still recommend no increase be granted, claiming the firm's rate of return would be nearly 20 percent with the increase.

The city contends the current rate of return of 12.5 percent is sufficient.

During the March hearing, council members said Storer made a lot of promises for improved service, but said they wanted to see those improvements before approving an increase.

For one thing, they said, the company promised to install an earth station that would bring in 35 viewing channels to Laguna Beach customers.

Renee Collins, manager of the Laguna Niguel-based company, said construction has begun on the earth station site and the new channels should be added the latter part of June.

Council members also wanted to see the results of a promised questionnaire to homes currently not served by the company. Ms. Collins said results are not being tabulated and should be before the council before Tuesday's meeting.

Residents in Temple Hills complained that many property owners did not receive the questionnaire, which asks if those homeowners would like the service in their area, which is not currently connected to the cable.

Those homeowners say no rate increase should be permitted the firm unless areas not served by the company are hooked up. And, they say, if the company does not hook up their hillside areas, another firm should be sought to serve Laguna Beach.

Other questions to be answered by Storer officials Tuesday include an analysis of the company's complaint service, its billing procedures and a request guaranteeing continued public access to Channel 10 by video clubs.

The council meeting begins at 6 p.m. in council chambers, 505 Forest Ave.

Campus growing

College still retains rural atmosphere

CAMPUS CASUAL — A leisurely pace prevails at Saddleback College's North Campus in Irvine as students stroll and chat along tree-lined walks that lead to the clock tower at the campus center. Orange grove provides rustic backdrop for the college sign. Opened in January 1979 with an enrollment of fewer than 1,500, attendance has swelled to about 6,000 full and part-time students. The 60-acre campus is located at the corner of Jeffrey Road and Irvine Center Drive.

Half empty parking lot masks growing enrollment, expected to reach 10,000 students in a few years

Library has more than 2,000 books, microfilm index for Mission Viejo campus' 100,000 volumes.

Morning coastal drizzle may linger

The National Weather Service is predicting more hazy sunshine with scattered drizzles Tuesday morning.

A weather service spokesman said high temperatures in Orange County are expected to be in the low 60s tonight and in the high 70s at the beaches Tuesday.

Some clearing can be expected in the afternoon, the spokesman said, and no heavy rain is predicted.

Lifeguard departments along the Orange Coast reported small to average crowds at the beaches over the weekend, with the overcast weather apparently keeping people away.

A Long Beach man and an El Toro man drowned in two separate diving accidents in Laguna Beach and Newport Beach Saturday.

Roger Lovejoy reportedly drowned while attempting to dive for a lost weight belt off Abalone Point, just south of El Morro Beach in Laguna

Ivan Kowalchuk, 20, drowned while scuba diving with two friends off Corona del Mar Beach at 2:45 p.m. Saturday. He was pronounced dead on arrival at Hoag Memorial Hospital.

Rip currents plagued bathers at Aliso, Capistrano, Dana Point and Niguel State Park beaches over the weekend.

More landslide funds needed

Cost overruns for reconstruction of the Del Mar Avenue landslide will exceed $75,000, city officials say, and they want the Laguna Beach City Council to use unanticipated investment earnings to make up the difference.

Reconstruction of the Arch Beach Heights hillside damaged in the February 1980 rains, amounts to $830,760.

When the city did not receive federal emergency funds for the reconstruction last year, the City Council voted to use money from the city's general fund budget to pay for the work.

But cost overruns amounting to $75,644 came as a result of the city's need to remove and recompact about 30,000 extra cubic yards of earth at the landslide site as well as extra work such as hydroseeding the bare earth and filling in two wells.

Council members will be asked Tuesday to appropriate the additional $75,644 from investment earnings, which were originally estimated to be about $250,000. It now appears the actual revenues from investments will be more in the neighborhood of $490,000.

City officials said they are still hopeful federal funds will be approved for the reconstruction work.

Terry Brandt, director of Municipal Services, said an appeal of a federal decision denying funds for the project will be resubmitted to the federal government within two weeks.

Dana Point man held in rape case

A 25-year-old Dana Point man has been arrested on rape and child molestation charges after he allegedly held a 13-year-old Corona del Mar girl for more than three hours while forcing her to perform sex acts, police report.

Steve Gutierrez Reyes, an unemployed laborer, was arrested in front of an East Coast Highway restaurant and held on $25,000 bail.

Newport detectives claim the incident started early Saturday when the 13-year-old was forced into a man's car in Corona del Mar.

The man, police said, drove the girl to a parking lot behind a restaurant, raped her and forced her to perform sex acts. Police claim the man also obtained the girl's phone number.

The girl's parents notified police who asked the 13-year-old to set up a rendezvous with the man if he called. Police claim the man called Sunday and set up a meeting spot with the girl.

Police said they apprehended Reyes after he drove up to the meeting spot and then led officers on a brief foot chase.

Towering penalty

Huntington duo still grounded

Of the Daily Pilot Staff

Huntington Beach High School Principal Ann Chlebicki says she's holding firm on her decision to punish two student leaders who climbed the school's bell tower by removing them as masters of graduation ceremonies next week.

Johnnie Gonsalves, senior class president, and Shawn Mitchell, student body president, braced themselves between the school auditorium and the tower and pushed up to the first ledge of the structure and then climbed into a window on May 20.

They were spotted inside the tower by a school administrator with binoculars and were suspended for three days and removed as graduation officials.

Although the principal is remaining firm, Sandra Gonsalves says she's changed her mind about the controversy. She said she doesn't want her son to be reinstated as a graduation official because she thinks the punishment will teach him a valuable lesson.

Initially, Mrs. Gonsalves complained to district officials that the punishment was too harsh and constituted discrimination because her son is a student leader.

"Johnnie has a touch of the clown in him," his mother said today. "I still think the principal overreacted but this may teach Johnnie a lesson to be responsible that will help him later in life.

Shawn Mitchell, an experienced rock climber, also doesn't think the prank was a big deal. "I just like to climb," he said.

Principal Chlebicki said both boys will be allowed on the podium to accept their diplomas.

The school's tower, estimated to be 121 feet high, has been the center of past student pranks. One year seniors placed a giant truck tire innertube over the spire at the top of the tower.

Buzan rites set tonight

Memorial services will be tonight at 7 for Branko M. Buzan, an artist and woodworker who lived in Laguna Beach after retiring from the aerospace industry. He was 61.

Mr. Buzan died Saturday at his Laguna Beach home.

He was born Sept. 15, 1919 in Yugoslavia and worked for more than three decades at the McDonnell Douglas plant in Long Beach in the model shop.

He is survived by his father, Frank Buzan, of Laguna Beach; brothers Boris, a Laguna Beach sculptor (noted for his Christmas display on Main Beach Park each year); and Bogdan Buzan of New York.

Services will be at Ray Family Laguna Beach Mortuary.

JUST COASTING

Wrath sweeps inland

CRYING FOUL & SUCH: Sometimes you may get the notion that the only voices of indignation and outrage over action of our wonderful state Coastal Commission are raised by residents of this best of all possible coasts. Not quite true, maybe. Oh, it is true that perhaps the loudest cries of foul come from the coastline as the Coastal Commission's social tinkers and bureaucratic functionaries pontificate on some of their more arbitrary and capricious dicta.

ONCE, FOR EXAMPLE, the coastal czars, in their infinite wisdom, granted a Newport Beach bank the right to build only after bank officials agreed to buy a small bus to transport visitors from its parking lot to the beach.

Another hotel upcoast got a permit to add rooms only after the commission ruled a certain number of rooms must be held open for less affluent beach visitors.

One notion of how cut-rate rooms would be allocated to the poor was by the zip code of their neighborhood. One of the zip codes thus anointed just happened to include the University of Southern California campus. Such weekend cut-rate fun.

THE EVER-BENEVOLENT commission was also poised to demand that some Malibu residents grant beach easements across their property after their homes burned down. In South Laguna, an easement was demanded through a residential airport parking area.

Indeed, the list seems endless. But again, most of the cries of foul and protests of private property confiscation have come from coastal people. And why not? You don't get too much demand for beach easements in Brea or La Habra.

TOM MURPHINE

La Habra welcoming committee for the coastal czars

BUT WAIT! We have another recent bit of Coastal Commission wonderfulness wherein the Lutheran Church of Half Moon Bay, upcoast in San Mateo County, has been blocked from building a new sanctuary.

Some coastal commission savants apparently believe the new church might block a small patch of ocean view from the coast highway.

The Lutherans, who have been attempting to build on the property they've owned since 1979, insist that any possible view of significance has already been blocked by other structures.

It sounds like an old, old story around these parts.

Yet, from where does a strong voice of protest come? Why from the newspaper in Brea and La Habra, in our own inland Orange County.

Thus did the Daily Star Progress, serving those two communities fume, "Up until recently, there has been no agency of government, local, state or federal, that has dared tell Americans where they could or could not build a church."

"IF AGENCIES LIKE the Coastal Commission aren't abolished and legislators who promote such heinous agencies aren't defeated, we can all kiss our religious liberties goodbye.

"Agencies like the Coastal Commission collect the totalitarian mentality to work within its structure, like a dung heap collects flies.

"The stench of its most recent action should appall every Christian in America as well as every civilized person who believes in the sanctity of our Constitutional rights."

MY GOODNESS! Rather strong words heaped on the coastal commission brass from a place not even touched by the waters of the Pacific. The commission's popularity appears to be sweeping inland.

Or maybe the tide just came in.

Captured by convict, they think it's funny

ZEBULON, Ga. (AP) — Being victimized isn't always a frightening experience, claims Doug Williams, who says being tied hand and foot by an armed, escaped convict was a "pretty laughable situation."

The convict allegedly left Williams, his wife, Connie, and four other hostages tied to an overhead beam in a house Williams was remodeling. They started freeing themselves before the gunman even left.

"The whole thing was silly. I just wish we could have gotten a picture of the six of us in here tied up," Williams said. "It would have made a great little keepsake. "It was crazy. By the time he had gotten started tying the third one, the first two of us had worked our hands free. He didn't notice though," Williams said. "It took an hour and a half to tie us all up. We were beginning to think he was never going to leave."

Billy G. Waters, 51, of suburban Atlanta, allegedly grabbed the gun of Columbus Correctional Institution guard James Holmes recently while Waters and three other inmates were working outside the prison grounds in Columbus, said state prisons spokeswoman Sara Engle.

Waters, serving 12 years for voluntary manslaughter, allegedly forced his three fellow inmates and the guard into a county truck and drove about 50 miles, where they abandoned the vehicle and marched through the woods until they got to Williams' house two days later authorities said.

When Williams and his wife came home, the gunman and the others were waiting.

"I walked in the front door and there was Mr. Waters, standing at the base of the stairs with pistol pointed at me. It was like scenes from a silly movie," Williams said in an interview with The Columbus Enquirer.

PRISON AID — Chief Justice Warren Burger says that, despite a tight federal budget, the nation should establish an academy for prison guards and provide mandatory educational and vocational programs for inmates.

Veterans probing pesticide

RUTLAND, Vt. (AP) — In a move they are calling "Operation Peace of Mind," some local Vietnam veterans are programming a computer to determine the chances that they and other vets were exposed to the herbicide Agent Orange.

The program being put together by the Rutland chapter of the Vietnam Veterans of America also should be able to determine whether veterans were in the paths of two other herbicides used by the U.S. Army, Agent White and Agent Blue.

Dropping of state no excuse

DENVER (AP) — A judge here has ruled that drunken-driving charges no longer will be dismissed simply because the court summons fails to include the word "Colorado" next to the word "Denver."

In her ruling, U.S. District Judge Susan Barnes was responding to a case earlier this year when a Denver county judge dismissed a drunken-driving charge against Marilyn Northcutt on that technicality.

Farmers to help needy

GLASGOW, Scotland (AP) — The head of Britain's National Farmers' Union has said it is time to devote more attention to the underprivileged of the world.

"It is time we looked more closely at ways in which we can help feed those who are in a worse position," Richard Butler told a convention of agricultural writers.

"In the long term, ways of increasing the efficiency of agriculture all over the globe, by advice and help, will provide a lasting answer."

Most blacks in South

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite decades of migration to the North and West, more than half of America's blacks still live in the South, the Census Bureau has reported.

In a study released recently, the bureau said 53 percent of black Americans were in the South. It added that during the 1970s about as many blacks moved to the South as left the region. New York had at least 2,401,842 black residents, the most in the nation. California was second, with 1,819,220 and Texas third with 1,710,250.

Daughter is obstinate

She refuses mother's plea to visit crippled father

DEAR ANN LANDERS: My husband recently had a severe stroke. He is paralyzed on his right side. His speech is slurred but comprehensible.

Our happily married daughter has two children and lives in Baltimore. I have pleaded with her to come and see her father, but she refuses. She says she can't face the fact that he is crippled and will never be the same daddy she used to know. Her dread is understandable, but her obstinance is killing me.

I offered to pay her plane fare (we live in California and it is an expensive trip), but it didn't change her mind. I know she really loves her father, and he is crazy about her.

Please tell me if I should stop begging her to make the trip. Also, is she wrong for refusing to come? I will be watching and waiting for your answer. — HEARTBROKEN MOTHER

Dear Mother: This isn't a matter of "right" or "wrong." It's a matter of emotional maturity.

I hope your daughter gets some counseling immediately. She needs to become adult enough to accept her handicapped father as he is. If she is unable to deal with this situation during his lifetime, she will carry a load of guilt to her grave.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I have you to thank for helping make my life miserable. My husband and I are getting on in years. We both read your column, and once or twice you have said, "If you don't use it, you'll lose it."

Well, my husband thinks you are talking directly to him. Even though he is less and less able to perform sexually (in fact, he is darn near impotent), sex is all he thinks about. I really do enjoy it now and then (once a month is okay), but I could live without it, too.

I do everything I can think of to discourage him. At bedtime I find things to do, such as washing clothes, cleaning closets, or mopping the floors. Usually he falls asleep. But if he wakes up in the middle of the night, he won't leave me alone until we start something. More often than not, he folds up and can't finish. Any advice? — TIED AFTER 40 YEARS

Dear Tied: Sounds like a ma-and-pa laundry . . . you are spending your evening hours at the tub and he's folding.

The challenge is to bring some starch to the scene. Your sad-in-the-sack husband should see the family doctor. There are ways to fortify the body to match a willing spirit.

It's more than likely that bedtime would be a less dread time if you didn't wear yourself out with all those domestic chores. (What do you do during the day?) A well-rested and eager partner could be a partial solution to the problem.

And since your husband lives by mottoes, he should try this one for size: "Don't abuse it . . . just renew it."

DEAR ANN LANDERS: My sister-in-law has a parrot that talks a blue streak. She swears "Clattertrap" knows what he is saying because he responds to questions and calls people by name. I say this is not possible. Please settle it once and for all. — SAN JUAN

Dear San: Talking birds are imitators. There is no creative thinking going on in their feathered heads.

Sagittarius: Be 'selfish'

Tuesday, June 2, 1981

By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Relative makes proposal for new project. Be open-minded, not gullible. Emphasis on independence, originality and stimulation provided by romantic interlude. Focus also on trips, correspondence, special reports.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Evaluation of assets shows you are in better financial position than originally anticipated. Protect valuables, improve security measures. Hunch pays dividends. You recoup loss and regain sense of direction.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Popularity is on upswing; judgment, intuition and timing hit mark. Another Gemini and a Sagittarian play important roles. Accept invitation to social event. You are due to meet people who aid your cause.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Face truth as it exists, not merely as you wish it might be. You encounter individual who aids in rebuilding structure which had "decayed" as result of neglect. Aquarius, Scorpio, Leo natives figure prominently.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Ability to be analytical surges to forefront. Don't be satisfied to know something merely happened — find reasons, detect motives. Member of opposite sex figures prominently. Additional funds will be made available for business or career project.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Differentiate between false and sincere flattery. Surprise gift could be on agenda. Emphasis also on home, family and important domestic adjustment. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio natives play significant roles. Turn on charm.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Long-distance call creates aura of excitement. Accent on communication, education, publication and acute perceptiveness. Define meanings, see places and people as they are, not merely as you wish they might exist. Watch Pisces!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Emphasis on money, investments, financial security and credit ratings. Cancer, Pisces and another Scorpio figure prominently. Older individual becomes valuable ally. Timing is essential to progress. Check with Capricorn!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You strike chord of universal appeal. People are drawn to you with their problems. Don't neglect your own needs — it is time to be "creatively selfish." Aries, Leo, Libra natives play important roles. Finish!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Let go of "technique" which creates friction, delay and ultimate loss. Strive for fresh procedures, encourage new contacts and renovate personal surroundings. You'll gain greater degree of independence. Watch Leo!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Good lunar aspect coincides with romance, creativity, special relationships with children and speculative ventures. In games of chance, stick with the numbers 2, 11 and 20. Another Aquarian plays significant role.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Focus on important details, correction of past errors and willingness to review and revise material. Improve security measures. Remove safety hazards from home. Make intelligent concession to older family member.

Fatalities rise

CHICAGO (AP) — About 8,200 people died in accidents in the United States in January, up 4 percent from the 7,900 recorded in January 1980, according to figures released by the National Safety Council.

According to council president Vincent L. Tofany, 3,830 died in motor-vehicle accidents, 1,300 in public accidents, 2,300 in home accidents, and 1,200 in workplace accidents. Because some deaths are recorded in several categories, Tofany said the four classes add up to more than the 8,200 total deaths.

Pleasure trip turns tragic as 9 perish

HONOLULU (AP) — It was supposed to have been a two-hour, 23-mile pleasure cruise on a 20-foot cabin cruiser for 21 residents of the sparsely populated island nation of Kiribati.

Two months and 1,300 miles later, nine were dead and the other 12 had survived only by drinking rainwater or sea water and eating fish — including a shark — that they had caught with their bare hands.

The survivors were reported in good condition Sunday at a hospital on Moen Island in the Truk District of the U.S. Trust Territory of the Pacific. A hospital nurse said all 12 — including a 3-year-old boy — probably would be released and flown home in about a week.

The islanders had drifted helplessly in the Pacific Ocean for 60 days until they were spotted Friday by the helicopter of a San Diego-based tuna boat about 700 miles southeast of Guam.

Their cramped cabin cruiser left Abaiang Island the morning of March 26 to bring the people to Tarawa, the capital of Kiribati, formerly known as the Gilbert Islands.

"A good term to describe the boat would be overcrowded," said Quartermaster Mike McKiernan, a Coast Guard spokesman on Guam.

But Cinrata Teaaene, a police

constable on Tarawa, said it is not unusual for ships on short trips in Kiribati to be crowded because there is a shortage of boats in the poor island nation.

Most of the people on board for the two-hour trip were headed to Tarawa for a vacation, Teaaene said. The rest were bringing food to a market there.

But at one point the ship's only engine failed and the boat began drifting to the west, McKiernan said. As prevailing currents carried the boat through an area of few landfalls, the islanders lived on the goods that were being taken to the market.

The supply of fresh water lasted about four days; the food about two weeks, which was just about as long as the Kiribati Marine Guard hunted for the missing ship.

After that, funeral services were held for many of the missing.

"We searched, but we didn't know where to look," Teaaene said. "I think all the people thought they were dead, but hoped they were alive."

Once the initial supplies ran out, those on the ship survived by catching rainwater and fish with their bare hands, said Coast Guard spokesman Keith Spangler in Honolulu. He said their last fish, a shark, was caught two weeks ago.

"Each rainfall would provide enough water for about three or four days," he said. When no rain fell, the islanders drank sea water.

The Coast Guard has not yet been able to determine when people began dying on board the ship.

"That's something we're hoping to hear from the officials on Truk on Monday," McKiernan said Sunday. He said officials believe the bodies of the dead were buried at sea one by one.

High court overrules nude dancing ban

Use of zoning powers violates constitutional rights of freedom of speech

WASHINGTON (AP) — Local governments cannot use their zoning powers to ban all live nude dancing, the Supreme Court ruled today.

By a 7-2 vote, the justices said such a comprehensive ban violates constitutional rights to freedom of speech and expression.

Today's case involved Mt. Ephraim, N.J., which banned within its boundaries all nude dancing and all other forms of live entertainment.

"In this case, Mt. Ephraim has not adequately justified its substantial restriction of protected activity. None of the justifications asserted in this court was articulated by the state courts and none of them withstands scrutiny," Justice Byron R. White said in an opinion for the majority.

White continued that it did not appear that Mt. Ephraim's zoning authority has arrived at a defensible conclusion that unusual problems are presented by live entertainment.

In today's case, the high court overturned the 1978 convictions of James F. Schad and Juliette Ann DiLuciano on charges of offering live nude dancing as a form of entertainment at an establishment known as Six Thirteen. Each had been fined $300.

In the nude dancing case, New Jersey appeals courts upheld the convictions and the borough's zoning ordinance as applied to Six Thirteen. The State Supreme Court refused to review the case last Jan. 18.

In other action today, the high court:

Father held in try to sell infant girl

Orange County Sheriff's deputies have taken a 6-week-old baby girl into protective custody after her father allegedly tried to sell her to Mission Viejo restaurant patrons early today.

Sheriff's spokesman Lt. Wyatt Hart said the infant was taken to the Albert Sitton Home in Orange. She was found to be in good health, Hart said.

Hart said sheriff's deputies were called to the restaurant near the San Diego Freeway and Crown Valley Parkway in Mission Viejo at about 1 a.m.

Hart said a group of customers at the restaurant told investigators that Randy Gorden Wilson, 29, at first offered to sell his baby daughter, and then tried to give her away.

Wilson, who Hart said has no permanent address, was taken into custody at the scene and later booked for cruelty to a child. Hart said he is now held at Orange County jail in lieu of $5,000 bail.

Sheriff's deputies are searching for the child's mother, who they said they believe is a 15-year-old juvenile. Hart said they do not know the child's name, and are calling her "Baby Wilson."

Blood coats Beirut beaches

Syria soldiers, Christian militia kill civilians

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syrian soldiers and Christian militiamen rocketed, shelled and sniped at each other today in a second straight day of fighting that left at least 23 civilians dead and 276 injured, many of them on Beirut's beaches, police said.

A police spokesman said the Lebanese capital's Mediterranean shores, jammed with bathers, were a major target for the gunners Sunday. It was the first time the beaches had been shelled since the nation's 1975-76 civil war, and Beirut newspapers called the bombardment the "beach war."

Exchanges of artillery, rocket and gunfire between Moslem and Christian sectors of the Lebanese capital began late Saturday. They reached a crescendo at midafternoon Sunday and subsided to sporadic sniping at sundown.

But by midday today, the boom of heavy artillery had returned, and fires were burning in several residential neighborhoods. The Christian "Voice of Lebanon" radio said three Christian children, a 2-year-old boy and two sisters aged 3½ and 4½, were killed when a shell slammed into their home.

The casualties pushed the Lebanese toll to more than 550 dead since April 1.

Sniping and artillery duels also were reported in the Christian city of Zahle, 30 miles to the east in the Bekaa Valley, where a Christian attempt to open a military supply road ignited the Syrian-Christian fighting at the start of April and led to Syria's deployment of Soviet-made SAM-6 missiles.

As U.S. envoy Philip Habib prepared to return to the Middle East to try again to resolve the Syrian-Israeli dispute over the missiles, Syria's foreign minister reiterated his government's refusal to remove them from Lebanon, and the leader of the Lebanese Christians fighting the Syrians said war is imminent.

Israel is threatening to attack the missiles unless they are withdrawn. Syria refuses to take them out, and the dispute threatens to touch off a new Arab-Israeli war.

The SAMs "are there to stay. They will not be withdrawn," declared Foreign Minister Abdul Halim Khaddam.

2 aliens in fight; one dead

Santa Ana police investigators are searching today for a man who witnesses said shot and killed another man in what a detective called "basically a macho type situation."

Dead is Manuel Barrasa, 23, a laborer who lived in a Myrtle Street apartment complex. Police said they are searching for Sirilo Venegas, another laborer who lived nearby and allegedly fled in his car after the shooting.

Both men were from Mexico and had entered the United States illegally, said investigator Perrell Buckles.

He said several witnesses said the suspect, who allegedly was in a bad mood from another argument, started "bad-mouthing" Barrasa and some friends early Sunday morning.

Witnesses said the suspect pulled a knife on Barrasa, but when the victim came up with his own knife, the suspect left and returned with an automatic pistol, Buckles said.

Barrasa then was shot after he was challenged, the detective said. Barrasa was pronounced dead at the scene at 4:20 a.m. by paramedics, he said.

The survivors were picked up by the fishing boat, transferred to a Trust Territory field ship and brought to Moen, McKiernan said.

A hospital nurse said the survivors, were suffering from varying degrees of malnutrition and exposure, but were in "good shape, considering everything."

Crash victims recovered off Catalina

AVALON (AP) — A mini-submarine has recovered the bodies of two of the three people believed to have been in a light aircraft that crashed into the waters off Catalina Island three days earlier.

The sub, owned by Undersea Graphics, of Torrance, was successful in locating the plane on Sunday at a depth of 260 feet, beyond where deep sea divers had been able to search, according to the Sheriff's Department.

The bodies, a male and a female, were not immediately identified, said Deputy John Radeliff. They were found clear of the wreckage of the twin-engine plane in which three people were believed to be flying when it left Avalon, then went down, exploding as it hit the water.

No plans have been disclosed yet regarding a search for the third person, and the "possibility of a fourth" person aboard is still unconfirmed, said Radeliff.

The Federal Aviation Administration called in the mini-sub company after divers failed to find the wreckage or the victims because of the depth of the water. The three people believed to be aboard the plane were: pilot Steven Stoner of Tulare; Gary Lourenco of Tulare; and Colleen Knight of Visalia.

Body on sand identified

A body that washed up on Bolsa Chica State Beach in Huntington Beach Friday evening has been identified as Timothy Ellis Lambeth, 18, of Gila, N.M., according to an Orange County Sheriff's spokesman.

Lambeth had been reported missing after going in the surf on May 18 at Huntington Beach.

His body was discovered on the beach near Golden West Street at 6:45 p.m.

Countian held in dad's slaying

Hatchet, butcher knife used in Anaheim attack; police seeking motive

An Anaheim man was jailed Sunday after police said he confessed to killing his father with a hatchet and butcher knife.

Charles Thomas Hudec, 25, was being held today in the Anaheim City Jail on $250,000 bail in connection with the death of his father, Frank Hudec, 62.

Both lived at 2424 E. Tryon Ave. in Anaheim.

Investigators said today they haven't determined why the son allegedly attacked his father in their home, then stopped an officer in a patrol car about 3 a.m. to allegedly confess to the incident.

When police Sgt. Jack Parra and other officers reached the locked house, they heard a cry for help through a bedroom window, said Officer Dennis Sair.

The officers broke into the home and found the father on the bedroom floor with several stab and chop wounds, he said.

The father was taken to the UC Irvine Medical Center in Orange but died in surgery, Sair said.

A knife and hatchet believed to be used in the attack were found at the house, he said.

An investigator said Charles Hudec probably will be arraigned Tuesday in Municipal Court on murder charges.

Youths clash with troops on West Bank

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Rock-throwing Palestinian youths clashed with Israeli troops in Nablus and Ramallah on the occupied West Bank today, Israel Radio reported. The demonstrations came a day before the first anniversary of car bombings that maimed the mayors of the two towns.

Troops used tear gas against students demonstrating at Al Najah college in Nablus, the main West Bank town, Israel Radio said.

It said that in Ramallah to the south, youths blocked the streets with burning tires, threw rocks, waved the Palestinian flag and demanded an end to Jewish settlement in the West Bank, seized by Israel from Jordan in the 1967 Mideast war.

The bomb attacks on June 2, 1980 are widely believed to have been the work of Jewish terrorists, but no arrests have been made. The bombings seriously wounded mayors Bassam Shakaa of Nablus, who lost both legs at the knees, and Karim

Khalaf, who lost part of his left foot and suffered other injuries. The two men were among the most vocal radical spokesmen in the West Bank.

Earlier, the Israeli military command announced a military court on Sunday jailed five Arabs, from the Israeli occupied

Golan Heights, for three months without trial on charges of inciting fellow Arabs to oppose Israeli rule.

The announcement aroused protests today among some of the area's 15,000-strong Druse residents in the Golan Heights, which Israel seized from Syria in the 1967 Mideast War.

Agreed to decide whether local governments can enact wide ranging regulations of stores selling drug paraphernalia.

Drug paraphernalia laws have been passed in various forms nationwide in an attempt to cut down the number of "head shops" and to curb abuse of marijuana and other drugs.

Today's case involved the Village of Hoffman Estates, Ill., which enacted the regulations on Feb. 20, 1978.

Unlike many of the ordinances enacted in other cities and towns, the Hoffman Estates law only licenses and regulates the sales of drug paraphernalia and does not criminalize the use or possession of such items.

Agreed to decide whether states may ban certain truthful language from lawyer advertisements.

The justices said they will study a constitutional challenge to a Missouri Supreme Court rule banning certain language from all lawyer ads.

Today's action marks the first time the nation's highest court has agreed to study fully a dispute growing out of its 1977 decision that struck down the legal profession's longtime ban on lawyer advertising as an unconstitutional infringement on free speech.

That 1977 rule left it to the states to regulate the manner, time and place of lawyer advertising. And in the past four years, the Supreme Court has refused to reopen its study of the issue.

The case granted review Monday stems from disciplinary action taken against Richard M. Jacobs, a Clayton, Mo., lawyer, who sent out in a mailing an announcement of the opening of his office.

JURY . . .

should control cases where speculators sign agreements to own and occupy a unit, then rent it anyway.

Members also objected to a procedure where builders can trade or sell credits to build affordable units. "These credits have no value limit and are worth whatever the market for them will allow," members said in the report.

Under the county's affordable housing program, builders are required to include so-called affordable units in 25 percent of all developments of five or more units. The units must be priced so lenders will qualify buyers who make up to 120 percent of the county's median income.

The median currently is about $24,500 a year, according to the grand jury.

F.W. Olson, manager of the county's Information and Housing Development Office, said today that county procedures do control most of the grand jury's concerns.

Olson said some buyers coming from outside Southern California couldn't make a down payment without using other property as equity, although he added: "Obviously we're concerned if somebody walks in and already has a home."

He also added that allowing builders to barter credits for affordable units hasn't proved to be a problem, let alone an abuse. He said the practice gives builders flexibility to design smaller developments without rigid requirements.

More banks slash prime to 20 percent

NEW YORK (AP) — More major banks cut their prime lending rates to 20 percent today, and a smaller bank in St. Louis cut its rate even further amid talk that interest rates may have peaked.

Continental Illinois National Bank of Chicago and Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. of New York announced the cuts to 20 percent from 20.5 percent, matching a reduction made Thursday by Chase Manhattan Bank of New York and a few smaller banks. Other major banks were expected to follow.

In St. Louis, Southwest Bank cut its prime rate to 19.5 percent. The prime is the base rate charged by banks on loans to commercial and industrial customers.

The widespread feeling that rates may decline was aided by the report by the Federal Reserve Board late Friday that the nation's basic money supply fell for the second straight week.

"I feel interest rates have peaked and that we are probably in the process of a sustained decline," said Robert Schwartz, senior financial economist at Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc., the nation's largest investment firm, following that report.

School tower climbers still grounded

By PATRICK KENNEDY

Huntington Beach High School Principal Ann Chlebicki says she's holding firm on her decision to punish two student leaders who climbed the school's bell tower by removing them as masters of graduation ceremonies next week.

Johnnie Gonsalves, senior class president, and Shawn Mitchell, student body president, braced themselves between the school auditorium and the tower and pushed up to the first ledge of the structure and then climbed into a window on May 20.

They were spotted inside the tower by a school administrator with binoculars and were suspended for three days and removed as graduation officials.

Although the principal is remaining firm, Sandra Gonsalves says she's changed her mind about the controversy. She said she doesn't want her son to be reinstated as a graduation official because she thinks the punishment will teach him a valuable lesson.

Initially, Mrs. Gonsalves complained to district officials that the punishment was too harsh and constituted discrimination because her son is a student leader.

"Johnnie has a touch of the clown in him," his mother said today.

Campus growing

CAMPUS CASUAL — A leisurely pace prevails at Saddleback College's North Campus in Irvine as students stroll and chat along tree-lined walks that lead to the clock tower at the campus center. Orange grove provides rustic backdrop for the college sign. Opened in January 1979 with an enrollment of fewer than 1,500, attendance has swelled to about 6,000 full and part-time students. The 60-acre campus is located at the corner of Jeffrey Road and Irvine Center Drive.

School busing fees mulled

Faced with a $3.5 million deficit next year, trustees of the Irvine Unified School District have given tentative approval to a "partial-payment" plan on school busing.

Tonight the Board will vote on a sliding-scale fee plan, prepared by a staff that calls for families with an income of $18,000 or more to pay $100 for the first two children in the family, $50 for the third and no fee for the fourth.

Families with incomes over $16,000 but less than $18,000 will be asked to pay $100 for the first child, $50 for the second, $25 for the third and no fee for the fourth.

Those earning between $14,000 and less than $16,000 will be asked to pay $75 for the first child, $50 for the second and the third and fourth would ride free.

Those earning more than $12,000 but less than $14,000 will be asked to pay $50 for the first child, $25 for the second and free for the third and fourth.

Families earning less than $12,000 will receive free bus transportation for all children.

If the plan is approved tonight, a family with an income of $25,000 and three children would be expected to pay $250 a year.

The Board will meet at 7:30 p.m. at Lakeside Middle School, 3 Lemongrass, Irvine.

IRWD settlement reached on bonds

An agreement has been reached between the Irvine Ranch Water District and attorneys representing poor families who had challenged a $994 million bond authorization, it has been announced.

The settlement calls for the water district to create special assessment districts to fund sewer and water facilities in any area in which at least 10 percent of the units are designated for low and moderate income people.

In exchange, the plaintiffs represented by the Orange County Legal Aid Society agreed to drop an appeal after the IRWD won the suit filed last September.

The creation of assessment districts will allow landowners and developers to pay for water and sewage facilities through the sale of bonds that are repaid over a 10-year period, according to Art Korn, assistant general manager.

Currently developers finance water and sewer projects either by hiring outside contractors or by paying the water district one lump sum for connection to an existing line.

Korn said the advantage of an assessment district is that it will allow developers to pay for their projects over a long period with low interest bond rates.

"It's unofficially been our policy to support projects that are financially feasible," said Korn. "This settlement just formally puts it into our rules and regulations."

A similar agreement was worked out with 1,000 units in Northwood and a sewer treatment facility along the coast, according to Korn.

Last year Dr. Leopold received the Alumni Association Award from UCI for distinguished research.

Morning coastal drizzle may linger

The National Weather Service is predicting more hazy sunshine with scattered drizzles Tuesday morning.

A weather service spokesman said high temperatures in Orange County are expected to be in the low 60s tonight and in the high 70s at the beaches Tuesday.

Some clearing can be expected in the afternoon, the spokesman said, and no heavy rain is predicted.

Lifeguard departments along the Orange Coast reported small to average crowds at the beaches over the weekend, with the overcast weather apparently keeping people away.

A Long Beach man and an El Toro man drowned in two separate diving accidents in Laguna Beach and Newport Beach Saturday.

Roger Lovejoy reportedly drowned while attempting to dive for a lost weight belt off Abalone Point, just south of El Morro Beach in Laguna.

Ivan Kowalchuk, 20, drowned while scuba diving with two friends off Corona del Mar Beach at 2:45 p.m. Saturday. He was pronounced dead on arrival at Hoag Memorial Hospital.

Rip currents plagued bathers at Aliso, Capistrano, Dana Point and Niguel State Park beaches over the weekend.

JUST COASTING

Wrath sweeps inland

CRYING FOUL & SUCH: Sometimes you may get the notion that the only voices of indignation and outrage over action of our wonderful state Coastal Commission are raised by residents of this best of all possible coasts. Not quite true, maybe.

Oh, it is true that perhaps the loudest cries of foul come from the coastline as the Coastal Commission's social tinkers and bureaucratic functionaries pontificate on some of their more arbitrary and capricious dicta.

ONCE, FOR EXAMPLE, the coastal czars, in their infinite wisdom, granted a Newport Beach bank the right to build only after bank officials agreed to buy a small bus to transport visitors from its parking lot to the beach.

Another hotel upcoast got a permit to add rooms only after the commission ruled a certain number of rooms must be held open for less affluent beach visitors.

One notion of how cut-rate rooms would be allocated to the poor was by the zip code of their neighborhood. One of the zip codes thus anointed just happened to include the University of Southern California campus. Such weekend cut-rate fun.

THE EVER-BENEVOLENT commission was also poised to demand that some Malibu residents grant beach easements across their property after their homes burned down. In South Laguna, an easement was demanded through a residential carport parking area.

Indeed, the list seems endless. But again, most of the cries of foul and protests of private property confiscation have come from coastal people. And why not? You don't get too much demand for beach easements in Brea or La Habra.

TOM MURPHINE

La Habra welcoming committee for the coastal czars

BUT WAIT! We have another recent bit of Coastal Commission wonderfulness wherein the Lutheran Church of Half Moon Bay, upcoast in San Mateo County, has been blocked from building a new sanctuary.

Some coastal commission savants apparently believe the new church might block a small patch of ocean view from the coast highway.

The Lutherans, who have been attempting to build on the property they've owned since 1979, insist that any possible view of significance has already been blocked by other structures.

It sounds like an old, old story around these parts. Yet, from where does a strong voice of protest come? Why from the newspaper in Brea and La Habra, in our own inland Orange County.

Thus did the Daily Star Progress, serving those two communities fume, "Up until recently, there has been no agency of government, local, state or federal, that has dared tell Americans where they could or could not build a church."

"IF AGENCIES LIKE the Coastal Commission aren't abolished and legislators who promote such heinous agencies aren't defeated, we can all kiss our religious liberties goodbye.

"Agencies like the Coastal Commission collect the totalitarian mentality to work within its structure, like a dung heap collects flies.

"The stench of its most recent action should appall every Christian in America as well as every civilized person who believes in the sanctity of our Constitutional rights."

MY GOODNESS! Rather strong words heaped on the coastal commission brass from a place not even touched by the waters of the Pacific. The commission's popularity appears to be sweeping inland.

Or maybe the tide just came in.

Captured by convict, they think it's funny

ZEBULON, Ga. (AP) — Being victimized isn't always a frightening experience, claims Doug Williams, who says being tied hand and foot by an armed, escaped convict was a "pretty laughable situation."

The convict allegedly left Williams, his wife, Connie, and four other hostages tied to an overhead beam in a house Williams was remodeling. They started freeing themselves before the gunman even left.

"The whole thing was silly. I just wish we could have gotten a picture of the six of us in here tied up," Williams said. "It would have made a great little keepsake.

"It was crazy. By the time he had gotten started tying the third one, the first two of us had worked our hands free. He didn't notice though," Williams said. "It took an hour and a half to tie us all up. We were beginning to think he was never going to leave."

Billy G. Waters, 51, of suburban Atlanta, allegedly grabbed the gun of Columbus Correctional Institution guard James Holmes recently while Waters and three other inmates were working outside the prison grounds in Columbus, said state prisons spokeswoman Sara Engle.

Waters, serving 12 years for voluntary manslaughter, allegedly forced his three fellow inmates and the guard into a county truck and drove about 50 miles, where they abandoned the vehicle and marched through the woods until they got to Williams' house two days later authorities said.

When Williams and his wife came home, the gunman and the others were waiting.

"I walked in the front door and there was Mr. Waters, standing at the base of the stairs with pistol pointed at me. It was like scenes from a silly movie," Williams said in an interview with The Columbus Enquirer.

Veterans probing pesticide

RUTLAND, Vt. (AP) — In a move they are calling "Operation Peace of Mind," some local Vietnam veterans are programming a computer to determine the chances that they and other vets were exposed to the herbicide Agent Orange.

The program being put together by the Rutland chapter of the Vietnam Veterans of America also should be able to determine whether veterans were in the paths of two other herbicides used by the U.S. Army, Agent White and Agent Blue.

Dropping of state no excuse

DENVER (AP) — A judge here has ruled that drunken-driving charges no longer will be dismissed simply because the court summons fails to include the word "Colorado" next to the word "Denver."

In her ruling, U.S. District Judge Susan Barnes was responding to a case earlier this year when a Denver county judge dismissed a drunken-driving charge against Marilyn Northcutt on that technicality.

Farmers to help needy

GLASGOW, Scotland (AP) — The head of Britain's National Farmers' Union has said it is time to devote more attention to the underprivileged of the world.

"It is time we looked more closely at ways in which we can help feed those who are in a worse position," Richard Butler told a convention of agricultural writers.

"In the long term, ways of increasing the efficiency of agriculture all over the globe, by advice and help, will provide a lasting answer."

Most blacks in South

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite decades of migration to the North and West, more than half of America's blacks still live in the South, the Census Bureau has reported.

In a study released recently, the bureau said 53 percent of black Americans were in the South. It added that during the 1970s about as many blacks moved to the South as left the region. New York had at least 2,401,842 black residents, the most in the nation. California was second, with 1,819,220 and Texas third with 1,710,250.

Daughter is obstinate

She refuses mother's plea to visit crippled father

DEAR ANN LANDERS: My husband recently had a severe stroke. He is paralyzed on his right side. His speech is slurred but comprehensible.

Our happily married daughter has two children and lives in Baltimore. I have pleaded with her to come and see her father, but she refuses. She says she can't face the fact that he is crippled and will never be the same daddy she used to know. Her dread is understandable, but her obstinance is killing me.

I offered to pay her plane fare (we live in California and it is an expensive trip), but it didn't change her mind. I know she really loves her father, and he is crazy about her.

Please tell me if I should stop begging her to make the trip. Also, is she wrong for refusing to come? I will be watching and waiting for your answer. — HEARTBROKEN MOTHER

Dear Mother: This isn't a matter of "right" or "wrong." It's a matter of emotional maturity.

I hope your daughter gets some counseling immediately. She needs to become adult enough to accept her handicapped father as he is. If she is unable to deal with this situation during his lifetime, she will carry a load of guilt to her grave.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I have you to thank for helping make my life miserable. My husband and I are getting on in years. We both read your column, and once or twice you have said, "If you don't use it, you'll lose it."

Well, my husband thinks you are talking directly to him. Even though he is less and less able to perform sexually (in fact, he is darn near impotent), sex is all he thinks about. I really do enjoy it now and then (once a month is okay), but I could live without it, too.

I do everything I can think of to discourage him. At bedtime I find things to do, such as washing clothes, cleaning closets, or mopping the floors. Usually he falls asleep. But if he wakes up in the middle of the night, he won't leave me alone until we start something. More often than not, he folds up and can't finish. Any advice? — TIED AFTER 40 YEARS

Dear Tied: Sounds like a ma-and-pa laundry . . . you are spending your evening hours at the tub and he's folding.

The challenge is to bring some starch to the scene. Your sad-in-the-sack husband should see the family doctor. There are ways to fortify the body to match a willing spirit.

It's more than likely that bedtime would be a less dread time if you didn't wear yourself out with all those domestic chores. (What do you do during the day?) A well-rested and eager partner could be a partial solution to the problem.

And since your husband lives by mottos, he should try this one for size: "Don't abuse it . . . just renew it."

The Orange County Chapter of The National Association of Women in Construction will sponsor its annual Dream Home Contest Friday through Sunday. The location is the Huntington Center, Beach Boulevard and Edinger Avenue, Huntington Beach.

The participants in the Dream Home Contest are local junior high school students who compete for awards with their own architectural plans and scale models of their "dream home."

This course on Construction Technology is offered within the school districts as an elective to seventh and eighth graders. Judging of the models will occur Friday and awards will be presented at noon Saturday.

In conjunction with the Dream Home Contest will be a "Construction Opportunity Fair". Representatives of the various construction trades and unions will be present with literature, slides, and answers to employment questions and opportunities in this field.

Fatalities rise

CHICAGO (AP) — About 8,200 people died in accidents in the United States in January, up 4 percent from the 7,900 recorded in January 1980, according to figures released by the National Safety Council.

According to council president Vincent L. Tofany, 3,830 died in motor-vehicle accidents, 1,300 in public accidents, 2,300 in home accidents, and 1,200 in workplace accidents. Because some deaths are recorded in several categories, Tofany said the four classes add up to more than the 8,200 total deaths.

Budget weighed in Mesa

By JERRY CLAUSEN
Of the Daily Pilot Staff

The City of Costa Mesa's 1981-82 fiscal year budget goes to the City Council tonight for approval following public discussion about 6:30 at City Hall, 77 Fair Drive.

Sources indicate most public concern will be generated around the lack of funding for construction of parks on city land in west Costa Mesa and at Wimbledon Village in the north Mesa area.

In presenting the record-high $30.65 million budget to the council for study two weeks ago, City Manager Fred Sorsabal noted it was up 14.7 percent over this year's adjusted expenses.

City income, he noted, is expected to be up about 22 percent, with the largest segment coming from the city's 1 percent share of the state's 6 percent sales tax.

Increased spending next fiscal year is expected to resolve around pay hikes, hiring of 17 new employees, mostly firemen and police officers, and two major building projects.

Construction is expected to begin next year on a City Hall annex to house a fire station and communications center and on a city-owned building in the Lions Park area to house the Orange County Library for the downtown Costa Mesa area.

During a recent budget study session, Sorsabal warned council members that members of the Wimbledon Village Homeowners Association probably will seek development of a small park for their community this year.

He added that before such a move is contemplated, the council should consider development of parks on the city's west side, an area considered short of recreational facilities.

Any park development, he warned, may require additional maintenance personnel and other annual park maintenance expense.

Man arrested on sex charge with girl, 13

A 25-year-old Dana Point man has been arrested on rape and child molestation charges after he assertedly held a 13-year-old Corona del Mar girl for more than three hours while forcing her to perform sex acts, police report.

Steve Gutierrez Reyes, an unemployed laborer, was arrested in front of an East Coast Highway restaurant and held on $25,000 bail.

Newport detectives claim the incident started early Saturday when the 13-year-old was forced into a man's car in Corona del Mar.

The man, police said, drove the girl to a parking lot behind a restaurant, raped her and forced her to perform sex acts. Police claim the man also obtained the girl's phone number.

The girl's parents notified police who asked the 13-year-old to set up a rendezvous with the man if he called. Police claim the man called Sunday and set up a meeting spot with the girl.

Police said they apprehended Reyes after he drove up to the meeting spot and then led officers on a brief foot chase.

Born in 1906 in Newport? You're sought

Coordinators of Newport Beach's 75th anniversary ceremonies are searching for an individual — man or woman — who was born "in" Newport in 1906, the year the city was incorporated.

Since Newport didn't have its own hospital in 1906, record searching has proved difficult to anniversary coordinators.

Dr. Roger Morin, who is heading up the search, says since Newport didn't have its own hospital, anyone qualifies who had a family residing in the city in 1906 even if born elsewhere.

Newport's anniversary committee intends to honor the person found during ceremonies in September.

Anyone who qualifies or knows someone who does can contact Morin at 645-4905.

Towering penalty

Huntington duo still grounded

Of the Daily Pilot Staff

Huntington Beach High School Principal Ann Chlebicki says she's holding firm on her decision to punish two student leaders who climbed the school's bell tower by removing them as masters of graduation ceremonies next week.

Johnnie Gonsalves, senior class president, and Shawn Mitchell, student body president, braced themselves between the school auditorium and the tower and pushed up to the first ledge of the structure and then climbed into a window on May 20.

They were spotted inside the tower by a school administrator with binoculars and were suspended for three days and removed as graduation officials.

Although the principal is remaining firm, Sandra Gonsalves says she's changed her mind about the controversy. She said she doesn't want her son to be reinstated as a graduation official because she thinks the punishment will teach him a valuable lesson.

Initially, Mrs. Gonsalves complained to district officials that the punishment was too harsh and constituted discrimination because her son is a student leader.

"Johnnie has a touch of the clown in him," his mother said today. "I still think the principal overreacted but this may teach Johnnie a lesson to be responsible that will help him later in life."

"He really wants to be up there (as a graduation official) but he'll be sitting in the stands knowing that he screwed up," Mrs. Gonsalves said.

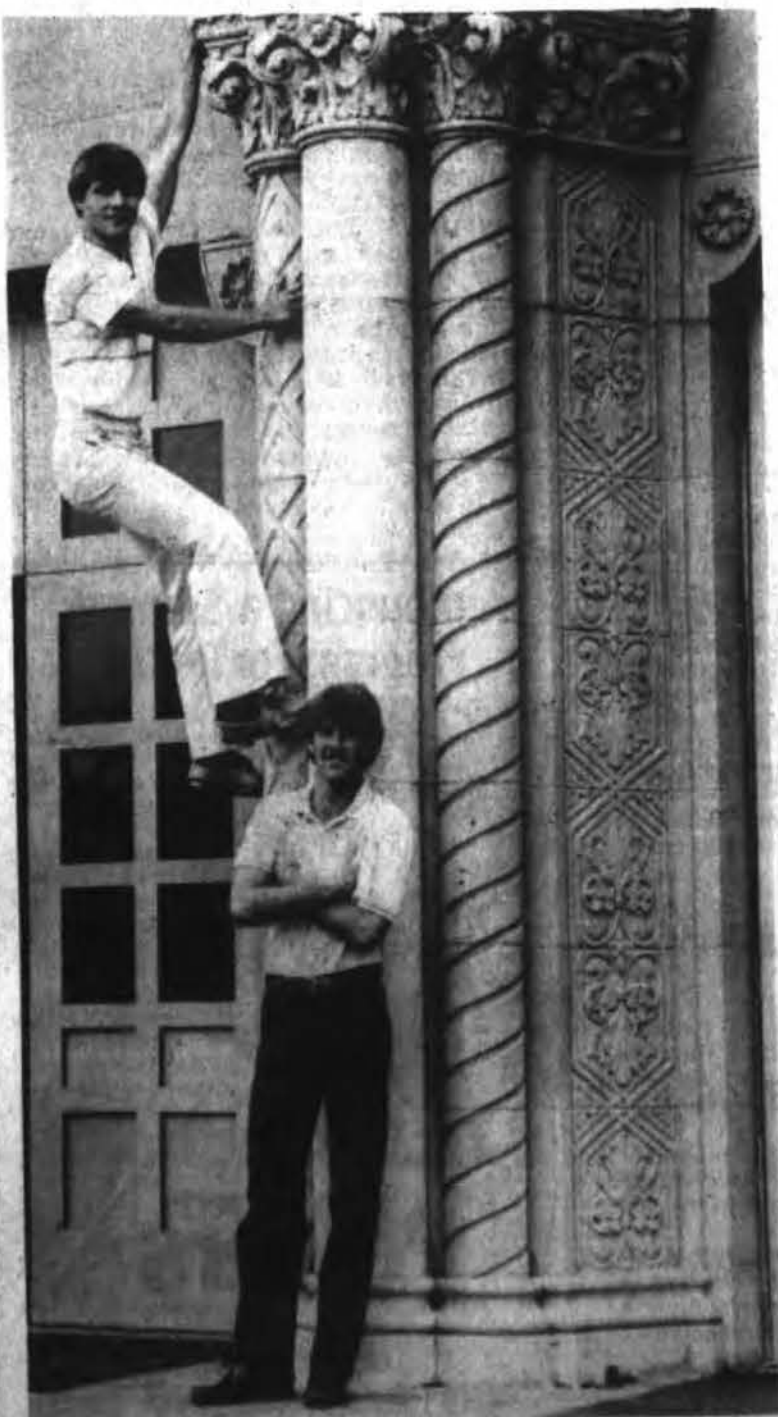

Her son, however, said he feels the punishment is "too harsh."

"I think the suspension should have been enough," Johnnie said.

Shawn Mitchell, an experienced rock climber, also doesn't think the prank was a big deal. "I just like to climb," he said.

Principal Chlebicki said both boys will be allowed on the podium to accept their diplomas.

The school's tower, estimated to be 121 feet high, has been the center of past student pranks. One year seniors placed a giant truck tire innertube over the spire at the top of the tower.

1,800 to graduate at Harbor schools

More than 1,800 seniors will don caps and gowns next week in Newport-Mesa School District graduation ceremonies for four full-curricula high schools, the continuation high and its Evening High School.

Back Bay (continuation) High's first graduation ceremony is scheduled June 11 at 9:45 a.m. on the school lawn at 390 Monte Vista St., Costa Mesa.

Keynote speaker will be Carl N. Karcher, founder and chief executive officer of Carl Karcher Enterprises, whose firm donated an electronic cash register data system to the school in 1977 when it was known as McNally High.

Susan Hasbrouck has been chosen student speaker for the 60-member class.

Newport Harbor, the district's oldest high school, will graduate 410 seniors at its Davidson Field on June 11 at 5 p.m.

Newport High valedictorians are Laura Forbes and Lisa Payne. Jeffrey Reck is salutatorian.

Keynote speaker for baccalaureate ceremonies Sunday at 5 p.m. in the school quad is the Rev. Paul Strawn of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Newport Beach.

Corona del Mar High's 465 seniors will graduate at ceremonies June 11 at 3:30 p.m. in the school quad.

Valedictorians are Mark Evans and Cynthia Stoughton, with three students scheduled to speak. They are William Fawcett Jr., Michael L. Fell and Scott D. Swan.

Baccalaureate is Sunday at 4 p.m. in the quad with Dr. Alfred W. Painter as keynote speaker.

A reception will follow in the commons area.

Costa Mesa High's class of 390 will receive diplomas on June 10 at 7 p.m. in the Orange Coast College stadium across the street from the Mustang campus.

The six class valedictorians are Lisa Elaine Dahill, Tien Dung Duong, Richard R. Fort, Laura Lee Nakashima, Ly M. Nguyen and Michael R. Reese.

The senior class has chosen students Jody Raya and Stephanie Webster, student body president, as speakers.

Mesa High's baccalaureate will be at 7:30 p.m., June 9, at the district auditorium in Newport Harbor High with teacher Paul Kahn as keynote speaker.

Estancia High's graduation ceremonies for 450 seniors is set for 7 p.m., June 10, at Davidson Field (Newport Harbor High). Valedictorians are Cara Francy and Laetitia May.

Estancia's baccalaureate is set for 7 p.m. at Orange Coast College's auditorium with teacher Carolyn Wolfe as keynote speaker.

Newport-Mesa Evening High School's 35-member senior class will be graduated in ceremonies at the school, 1001 Presidio Square, Rooms 6-7, in Costa Mesa on June 10 at 5 p.m.

Attorney Jack Hall is keynote speaker.

Patricia Colt is valedictorian and Robin Czaia is salutatorian for the sixth graduation awards ceremony for the school.

Budget meet set

The first of several 1981-82 fiscal year budget sessions, designed to trim up to $5 million from the budget set for this year, is scheduled June 9 by Newport-Mesa School District trustees.

NB firemen probe mobile home blaze

Newport Beach firemen today probed suspicious circumstances surrounding a mobile home that caught fire twice over the weekend. It was reduced to a burned-out shell by the second fire.

Fire investigators said the first fire in the mobile home at the De Anza Bayside Village, 300 East Coast Highway, was spotted at 2 p.m. Saturday.

Leon Seiditz, the owner, was not home at the time of either fire, authorities said.

Less than nine hours after the first fire, which destroyed two bedrooms and a bathroom, a second fire broke out. Firemen said the second fire gutted the home.

Total damage was estimated at $90,000 with slight damage to two adjoining homes at the mobile home park east of the Pacific Coast Highway bridge.

Seven join United Way drive in NB

Seven Newport Beach businessmen have been named to the executive committee for the 1981 United Way fund-raising drive.

Chairman for the campaign is Maury DeWald, a Newport resident and managing partner with Peat, Marwick and Mitchell.

Also on the committee is Charles Johnson, a Wells Fargo Bank vice president; Alan Jacobs, chairman of Bozell and Jacobs; Bob McIntyre, president of Southern California Gas Co.; Pete Kremer, president of the Irvine Company; Dale Boyer, a vice president of Smith International and Harry Bubb, president of Pacific Mutual.

DeWald says he hopes to exceed last year's fund raising record of $10.3 million.

JUST COASTING

Wrath sweeps inland

CRYING FOUL & SUCH: Sometimes you may get the notion that the only voices of indignation and outrage over action of our wonderful state Coastal Commission are raised by residents of this best of all possible coasts. Not quite true, maybe.

Oh, it is true that perhaps the loudest cries of foul come from the coastline as the Coastal Commission's social tinkers and bureaucratic functionaries pontificate on some of their more arbitrary and capricious dicta.

ONCE, FOR EXAMPLE, the coastal czars, in their infinite wisdom, granted a Newport Beach bank the right to build only after bank officials agreed to buy a small bus to transport visitors from its parking lot to the beach.

Another hotel upcoast got a permit to add rooms only after the commission ruled a certain number of rooms must be held open for less affluent beach visitors.

One notion of how cut-rate rooms would be allocated to the poor was by the zip code of their neighborhood. One of the zip codes thus anointed just happened to include the University of Southern California campus. Such weekend cut-rate fun.

THE EVER-BENEVOLENT commission was also poised to demand that some Malibu residents grant beach easements across their property after their homes burned down. In South Laguna, an easement was demanded through a residential carport parking area.

Indeed, the list seems endless. But again, most of the cries of foul and protests of private property confiscation have come from coastal people. And why not? You don't get too much demand for beach easements in Brea or La Habra.

TOM MURPHINE

La Habra welcoming committee for the coastal czars

BUT WAIT! We have another recent bit of Coastal Commission wonderfulness wherein the Lutheran Church of Half Moon Bay, upcoast in San Mateo County, has been blocked from building a new sanctuary.

Some coastal commission savants apparently believe the new church might block a small patch of ocean view from the coast highway.

The Lutherans, who have been attempting to build on the property they've owned since 1979, insist that any possible view of significance has already been blocked by other structures.

It sounds like an old, old story around these parts.

Yet, from where does a strong voice of protest come? Why from the newspaper in Brea and La Habra, in our own inland Orange County.

Thus did the Daily Star Progress, serving those two communities fume, "Up until recently, there has been no agency of government, local, state or federal, that has dared tell Americans where they could or could not build a church.

"IF AGENCIES LIKE the Coastal Commission aren't abolished and legislators who promote such heinous agencies aren't defeated, we can all kiss our religious liberties goodbye.

"Agencies like the Coastal Commission collect the totalitarian mentality to work within its structure, like a dung heap collects flies.

"The stench of its most recent action should appall every Christian in America as well as every civilized person who believes in the sanctity of our Constitutional rights."

MY GOODNESS! Rather strong words heaped on the coastal commission brass from a place not even touched by the waters of the Pacific. The commission's popularity appears to be sweeping inland.

Or maybe the tide just came in.

PRISON AID — Chief Justice Warren Burger says that, despite a tight federal budget, the nation should establish an academy for prison guards and provide mandatory educational and vocational programs for inmates.

Veterans probing pesticide

RUTLAND, Vt. (AP) — In a move they are calling "Operation Peace of Mind," some local Vietnam veterans are programming a computer to determine the chances that they and other vets were exposed to the herbicide Agent Orange.

The program being put together by the Rutland chapter of the Vietnam Veterans of America also should be able to determine whether veterans were in the paths of two other herbicides used by the U.S. Army, Agent White and Agent Blue.

Dropping of state no excuse

DENVER (AP) — A judge here has ruled that drunken-driving charges no longer will be dismissed simply because the court summons fails to include the word "Colorado" next to the word "Denver."

In her ruling, U.S. District Judge Susan Barnes was responding to a case earlier this year when a Denver county judge dismissed a drunken-driving charge against Marilyn Northcutt on that technicality.

Farmers to help needy

GLASGOW, Scotland (AP) — The head of Britain's National Farmers' Union has said it is time to devote more attention to the underprivileged of the world.

"It is time we looked more closely at ways in which we can help feed those who are in a worse position," Richard Butler told a convention of agricultural writers.

"In the long term, ways of increasing the efficiency of agriculture all over the globe, by advice and help, will provide a lasting answer."

Most blacks in South

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite decades of migration to the North and West, more than half of America's blacks still live in the South, the Census Bureau has reported.

In a study released recently, the bureau said 53 percent of black Americans were in the South. It added that during the 1970s about 8 million blacks moved to the South as left the region. New York had at least 2,401,842 black residents, the most in the nation. California was second, with 1,819,220 and Texas third with 1,710,250.

Daughter is obstinate

She refuses mother's plea to visit crippled father

DEAR ANN LANDERS: My husband recently had a severe stroke. He is paralyzed on his right side. His speech is slurred but comprehensible.

Our happily married daughter has two children and lives in Baltimore. I have pleaded with her to come and see her father, but she refuses. She says she can't face the fact that he is crippled and will never be the same daddy she used to know. Her dread is understandable, but her obstinance is killing me.

I offered to pay her plane fare (we live in California and it is an expensive trip), but it didn't change her mind. I know she really loves her father, and he is crazy about her.

Please tell me if I should stop begging her to make the trip. Also, is she wrong for refusing to come? I will be watching and waiting for your answer. — HEARTBROKEN MOTHER

Dear Mother: This isn't a matter of "right" or "wrong." It's a matter of emotional maturity.

I hope your daughter gets some counseling immediately. She needs to become adult enough to accept her handicapped father as he is. If she is unable to deal with this situation during his lifetime, she will carry a load of guilt to her grave.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I have you to thank for helping make my life miserable. My husband and I are getting on in years. We both read your column, and once or twice you have said, "If you don't use it, you'll lose it."

Well, my husband thinks you are talking directly to him. Even though he is less and less able to perform sexually (in fact, he is darn near impotent), sex is all he thinks about. I really do enjoy it now and then (once a month is okay), but I could live without it, too.

I do everything I can think of to discourage him. At bedtime I find things to do, such as washing clothes, cleaning closets, or mopping the floors. Usually he falls asleep. But if he wakes up in the middle of the night, he won't leave me alone until we start something. More

Dear Tied: Sounds like a ma-and-pa laundry . . . you are spending your evening hours at the tub and he's folding.

The challenge is to bring some starch to the scene. Your sad-in-the-sack husband should see the family doctor. There are ways to fortify the body to match a willing spirit.

It's more than likely that bedtime would be a less dread time if you didn't wear yourself out with all those domestic chores. (What do you do during the day?) A well-rested and eager partner could be a partial solution to the problem.

Captured by convict, they think it's funny

ZEBULON, Ga. (AP) — Being victimized isn't always a frightening experience, claims Doug Williams, who says being tied hand and foot by an armed, escaped convict was a "pretty laughable situation."

The convict allegedly left Williams, his wife, Connie, and four other hostages tied to an overhead beam in a house Williams was remodeling. They started freeing themselves before the gunman even left.

"The whole thing was silly. I just wish we could have gotten a picture of the six of us in here tied up," Williams said. "It would have made a great little keepsake.

"It was crazy. By the time he had gotten started tying the third one, the first two of us had worked our hands free. He didn't notice though," Williams said. "It took an hour and a half to tie us all up. We were beginning to think he was never going to leave."

Billy G. Waters, 51, of suburban Atlanta, allegedly grabbed the gun of Columbus Correctional Institution guard James Holmes recently while Waters and three other inmates were working outside the prison grounds in Columbus, said state prisons spokeswoman Sara Engle.

Waters, serving 12 years for voluntary manslaughter, allegedly forced his three fellow inmates and the guard into a county truck and drove about 50 miles, where they abandoned the vehicle and marched through the woods until they got to Williams' house two days later authorities said.

When Williams and his wife came home, the gunman and the others were waiting.

"I walked in the front door and there was Mr. Waters, standing at the base of the stairs with pistol pointed at me. It was like scenes from a silly movie," Williams said in an interview with The Columbus Enquirer.

Construction fair set

The Orange County Chapter of The National Association of Women in Construction will sponsor its annual Dream Home Contest Friday through Sunday. The location is the Huntington Center, Beach Boulevard and Edinger Avenue, Huntington Beach.

The participants in the Dream Home Contest are local junior high school students who compete for awards with their own architectural plans and scale models of their "dream home."

This course on Construction Technology is offered within the school districts as an elective to seventh and eighth graders. Judging of the models will occur Friday and awards will be presented at noon Saturday.

In conjunction with the Dream Home Contest will be a "Construction Opportunity Fair". Representatives of the various construction trades and unions will be present with literature, slides, and answers to employment questions and opportunities in this field.
